WAR ULTIMATUM TO GERMANY: MUST QUIT MOROCCO OR FIGHT

Rush Supplies To French Frontier; Kaiser Returns To-night

PARIS, JULY 28.—OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT WAS MADE TO-DAY THAT THE CABINET HAD DECIDED TO REORGANIZE THE ENTIRE ARMY. THIS ACTION IS REGARDED AS SIGNIFICANT IN VIEW OF THE MOROCCAN SITUATION. THE ANNOUNCEMENT HAD A DEPRESSING EFFECT ON THE BOURSE.

ORDERS WERE ISSUED FOR THE CAVALRY TO BE READY TO TAKE THE FIELD AT FIRST SIGNAL, AND FOR ALL REGIMENTS TO BE MUSTERED TO THEIR FULL QUOTA. FORTS ON THE GERMAN FRONTIER WILL BE HEAVILY STOCKED WITH PROVISIONS AND OTHER SUPPLIES TO BE CARRIED FROM PARIS IN SPECIAL TRAINS.

LONDON, July 28.—Great Britain has delivered her ultimatum to Germany in the Moroccan situation. Germany was told plainly to keep her hands off Morocco or fight.

The announcement of this prompt, emphatic and decisive action of the English Government, following the speeches of Premier Asquith and Mr. Balfour, in which they declared that the situation was very grave, has brought Great Britain to a realization of the fact that the war cloud is not a mirage.

AWAITING REPLY FROM GERMANY.

"Germany will have to back down or fight."

The standing of consols, which is the financial barometer of Europe, reflected the situation clearly to-day. Consols droped and the other securities were erratic.

Keyed to a High Pitch.

Two failures of business concerns were reported to-day as a result of the general depression in stocks following the gravity of the war situation.

There is no doubt but that the government is keyed up to a high pitch of feeling over Germany's action. The navy is held in readiness for orders at any minute.

Germany's attitude seems to be a waiting one—a sparring for time. The Kaiser is expected to land from his yacht at Kiel to-day, and soon after that it is believed he will make known what he proposes to do.

Premier Asquith went to Buckingham Palace to-day and had a long conference with King George. It is supposed that the Moroccan situation was gone over carefully and the possibilities of the Kaiser's reply to Great Britain's ultimatum was discussed.

Kaiser to Determine Issue.

The words of the Kaiser will mean either war or peace.

The German newspapers to-day were of a more conciliatory character than they have been for some time, and to some of the more optimistic it looked as though they were preparing to support the Kaiser in a backward step.

Some of the German newspapers regarded the speeches of Premier Asquith and Mr. Balfour as peace speeches—which has caused many an Englishman, even, to smile to-day.

France is Waiting.

France is waiting and watching—playing a quiet game. She realizes that England is steering the ship of state. The French cabinet held a long conference to-day with President Fallieres, cables from Paris say, and the entire Moroccan situation was gone over.

The information comes from reliable sources that the conversations between M. Cambon, the French ambassador to Germany, and the German foreign secretary have reached an impasse and that only Emperor's William's interference can change the attitude of the German foreign office.

A cable from Teneriffe, Canary Islands, says that the German gunboat Panther, which stirred up the trouble by suddenly appearing at Agadir, left Teneriffe to-day and that her destination is not known. It is believed that she sailed for an African port. There was considerable speculation to-day as to the significance of the movements of the German warship.

All of the political parties of England present a united front against Germany's action in the Moroccan matter. It is believed here now that Germany made the move with the mistaken idea that the domestic difficulties of Great Britain would prevent full attention being given to international affairs.

Not Caught Napping.

But by this time all Germany knows that if she thought for a moment that she would catch England napping that she was in error.

The Cabinet's firm stand was shown last week by the deliberate selection of Mr. Lloyd-George to announce to Germany, as he did in his speech to the bankers, that Great Britain would not permit herself to be treated "as of no account in the Cabinet of nations."

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, it is well known, is a strong advocate of peace and particularly well disposed toward Germany. A warning to Germany from him consequently had a special meaning.

Mr. Balfour clinched that warning by his emphatic declaration that to suppose that the opposition would not support the government under the circumstances was utterly to mistake the temper of the British people.

It became known to-day that France has been quietly preparing for war for some time. Orders were issued to the cavalry to be ready for action at any minute.

Hurrying Suppty Trains.

Special supply trains with provisions for the forts on the eastern frontier were ru[illegible] out of Paris at night, and all of the regiments of soldiers were mustered to their full quota.

From a French source came the report to-day that Baron von Kiderlen Waechter, the German foreign secretary, who is conducting the negotiations with Jules Cambon, the French ambassador at Berlin, has modified his original program and is now asking for a part instead of the whole coast of French Congo, but at the same time naming other conditions which France would find difficulty in accepting

BRITISH FLEET IS READY FOR ACTION

LONDON, July 28.—In view of the recent crisis over in Morocco, great significance is attached to the feverish activity which has been going on at the Woolwich Arsenal during the last couple of months. During that time employes in the lyddite factory have been working at the highest pressure. A full complement of men is engaged in the manufacture of this explosive, and now new men are being employed daily.

The entire force is working overtime making shells. So great has been the pressure that an adjoining building, which for some time has been out of use, has again been taken into service as an extension of the lyddite factory. Great activity is also displayed at the cordite factory, where there are fully as many workmen engaged as at the outbreak of the Boer War. They are also working overtime.

Home Fleet Now at Portland.

The first division of the home fleet arrived at Portland yesterday, twenty-four hours earlier than was expected. The fleet was ordered to coal and take on oil fuel immediately. Men worked throughout the entire night filling the lighters [illegible] be in readiness to coal the ships this morning.

Another significant fact is the speed with which the fitting of the new four and five-inch howitzers has been carried out. The manufacture and testing of the guns of this new type and the ammunition usually occupies about three years before they are finally approved and issued to the service. In the case of the new howitzers the work has been completed in less than twelve months. The guns and ammunition are now ready for active service.

Rush Ammunition.

Not alone in the royal arsenals is this unwonted activity noticed. A large firm of government contractors near Woolwich have been working for some time at the highest pressure producing small arm ammunition for government service. The serious view of the Morroccan situation held in official circles is emphasized by the large amount of correspondence which passed during the last few days between the war office and the Woolwich garrison, which, besides, have been in almost constant telephonic communication.

Emperor William of Germany is expected to arrive at Kiel to-day, and his presence will probably bring matters to a crisis. The German government, in the absence of the Emperor, has been marking time. But while maintaining a discreet official silence the government has let it be known that Germany was insistent in her Moroccan demands, though hopeful of a peaceful solution of the matter.

The German press as a rule accepts Premier Asquith's speech in the Commons as offering a possibility of escape from an embarrassing position. They do not discuss the more radical statement of Mr Balfour in which he declared England would not consent "to be wiped off the map of Europe."

Mr. Asquith's Statement.

Premier Asquith in his statement in the House of Commons yesterday said in part:

"A too close analysis might provoke recriminations which it is desirable to avoid. Conversations are proceeding between France and Germany, to which England is not a party, and it is earnestly and sincerely desired that these conversations result in an honorable and satisfactory arrangement to all concerned. The present situation is difficult and may prove harrassing unless a solution is found."

"The Moroccan question bristles with difficulties. The government has never claimed a predominant position there, but in the event that attempts at settlement fail, England must become an active party to the discussion of the situation.

"That would be our duty as a power signatory to the Algeciras treaty and would probably be our obligation under the terms of our 1904 agreement with France. AGAIN IT MAY BE OUR DUTY TO DEFEND BRITISH INTERESTS DIRECTLY AFFECTED BY FUTURE DEVELOPMENTS IN MOROCCO."

In promising the support of the opposition to the government, Mr. Balfour said: "If there are any who supposed that we

M. Cambon is the French Ambassador to Great Britain, and Sir Edward Grey is the British Foreign Minister.

THE MOROCCAN SITUATION TODAY

It was reported to day that England had sent an ultimatum to Germany to keep her hands off Morocco or be prepared to fight.

France is quietly watching the trend of events, realizing that England is the dominant factor in the Morocco trouble.

Germany seems to be sparring for time. The return of the Emperor is anxiously awaited. All depends upon his action.

There were two failures in London yesterday as a result of the depression in stocks. Consuls continued to drop to-day.

The British fleet is ready for action and there is feverish activity at the Woolwich Arsenal.

The German warship Panther left the Canary Islands to-day, probably for the African coast.

UNIONISTS TO AID VETO BILL

LONDON, July 28.—It is reported that Lord St. Aldwyn has pledged himself to lead fifty Unionist peers into the government lobby in support of the veto bill. This plan while relieving Lord Lansdowne of the onus of voting against his own amendments to the bill, would insure its passage without resort to the creation of peers, as the government can rely upon the Liberal peers, and it is doubtful whether Lord Halsbury will succeed in taking fifty into the opposition lobby.

FOUR HELD FOR THEFT OF GOLD

SOUTHBRIDGE, July 28.—John C. Anderson, former watchman for the American Optical Company, was charged in Southbridge District Court to-day with larceny of $25,000 worth of scrap gold from the company. Paul Cournoyer, Michael Dumas and Pierre La Montaine, former employes, were charged with receiving the gold. All pleaded not guilty and were held in heavy bonds for the Grand Jury.

FRANK DANIELS' DAUGHTER TO WED

NEW YORK, July 28.—The engagement is announced of Maude Daniels, daughter of Frank Daniels, the comedian, and Mrs. Daniels, to A. Rutledge Schmidt of Larchmont. Miss Daniels is the adopted daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniles, and is popular among the younger set at Larchmont and Rye.

MRS. NICKERSON WAS DROWNED

FALL RIVER, July 28.—The body of the woman found floating in the waters of Narragansett Bay, off Little Pond Cove, on the south shore of Little Compton, R. I., by fishermen Thursday morning, was identified this afternoon as that of Mrs. Lillian B. Nickerson, wife of Raymond C. Nickerson, formerly of Boston, but now of New York, who disappeared from the Joy line steamer Georgia on her trip from Providence to New York on the night of July 20. She was formerly a forewoman in Plant's shoe factory in Roxbury.

Identification, which was by means of the clothing that Mrs. Nickerson wore when she left her home, No. 20 Egleston street, Jamaica Plain, on July 20, was made by E. D. Grenville, step-father of Mrs. Nickerson, and Frederick C. Wolfe, a neighbor of the family. They went to Little Compton.

The body will be interred temporarily in Little Compton.

BLUES MEET REDS IN SHARP ACTION, FIGHTING IN DOWNPOUR OF RAIN

General J. Pluvius mixed into the war game to-day, attacking Reds, Blues and umpires alike. The rain came at 4 a. m., just as the opposing forces were being roused to break camp.

Breaking camp in a pouring rain made the soldiers realize that war in a rain—mimic or otherwise—is just what General Sherman said it is. The soldiers have been ready at any and all times to stand a rain of shot and shell and cannonballs. But a rain of rain gets their military goat.

The roads were first flooded and were then chewed up by the passage of the troops. Mud lay deep on every pike except the hard State highways. Wet to the skin and chilled by the lowered temperature, the mimic warriors were thoroughly uncomfortable.

But, while the rain was descending in force, the Reds and Blues kept up their manoeuvres for possession of the highway to Newburyport and for control of the Merrimac River bridges.

Reds Are Checked.

The situation at mid-afternoon was this. The Blues, breaking camp at Wilson's Corner, had moved rapidly along to Groveland bridge and thence through to West Newbury, where the steep elevation of Pipestave Hill gave them a superior position to sweep the country up or down river.

The Reds, hurrying along from West Boxford to check the Blues, were just able to intercept the rear guard of the Blues at Bear Hill on the Georgetown road. There was a rear action of an hour's duration between the Red advance and the cadets and artillery forming the Blue rear. The Reds were checked and the Blue rear guard then hustled along to join the main force. General Clark of the Blues has been successful so far in keeping his mobile forces together and in preventing the Reds from checking his advance or from cutting off any of his force.

The Blues broke camp at Wilson's Corner at 7 o'clock. Troops B and C were sent scouting ahead. The main body, composed of the Second Corps Cadets, Battery A of the field artillery and part of the Second Regiment, hustled on to Groveland bridge, arriving there at 8:30. The rear was brought up by Battery C and the rest of the Second Regiment under Captain Cox.

The main body swept along by Groveland Bridge and down the river road toward West Newbury. The rear guard followed on and had marched as far as Bear Hill on the Georgetown-Newbury road when the first battalion of the Eighth Infantry (Reds) under Major George H. Caufield came at a quick-step along the Bear Hill road from West Boxford. The Cadets and Battery C of the Blue rear formed for defence. There was an hour's brisk engagement, with cannonading and rifle shooting. The advance of the Reds was sharply checked. The main body of the Reds was too far in the rear to help and the attempt to cut off the rear guard of the Blues and to get at the main body of Blues failed.

Cadets Cover Retreat.

The Blue artillery went along and the Cadets, after covering the retreat sufficiently, hustled along after the artillery. Red cavalry, which came up, started at a discreet distance to harass the Blue rear, but it was evident that the Blues could not be turned at that point.

The main army of the Blues reached West Newbury at 11 o'clock. They kept on through the town and along the Newburyport highway, coming to the steep rise of Pipestave Hill. It was reported they would camp there for the night. The Blue army has proven very mobile. It has the advantage of auto trucks for moving baggage. The Blue force is concentrated in not over three miles of territory.

INJURED IN COLLISION.

ASHLAND, N. H., July 28.—W. Marshall, a piano drummer, of White River Junction, Vt., was thrown from his carriage when an automobile collided with it to-day near the Squam Lake House. He received a broken leg and bruises about the body.

Weight Increased, Indigestion Cured; 68 Years Old

Mr. Jacob Raab, Civil War veteran, heartily recommends this wonderful tonic stimulant and medicine.

"Will say that for the past five years I have used Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey for indigestion and other stomach troubles, and have had great relief from its use, and can highly recommend it to any-one suffering from the above ailments. I am a 'Civil War Veteran,' aged 68 years. Since using Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey have gained in flesh and weight, and my doctor says that I am good for many years yet." Jacob Raab, 22 Perrine Ave., Jersey City, N. J.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

the world's greatest tonic and stimulant, when taken just before a meal stimulates the mucous surfaces and little glands of the stomach to a healthy action, causing a sufficient flow of the gastric juice to digest the food. If continued it will cure the diseased or weakened function by its tonic and stimulating effect. It also excites the flow of saliva for the digestion of starchy food, preventing fermentation in the stomach and bowels.

It is a most wonderful remedy in the prevention and cure of dysentery, cramps, cholera, congestion, diarrhoea, chills, fevers, heat prostrations and all other Summer complaints.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is the only whiskey that was taxed by the Government as a medicine during the Spanish-American War.

Sold in SEALED BOTTLES ONLY by all druggists, grocers and dealers, or direct. $1.00 a large bottle. Medical booklet and doctor's advice free.

STATE FINANCE PLAN KILLED

The State Senate, by a roll call vote of 21 to 14 this afternoon, killed the bill for the appointment of a State Finance Commission, by referring the matter to the next Legislature. The bill was beaten on a straight party vote, with the exception of Senator Nason of Haverhill, who voted with the Democrats against layig the matter over to the next session.

The bill had been held up for several weeks in the Senate Ways and Means Committee and the debate on the matter, when it was finally brought up to-day, lasted two hours.

NEW VICTOR RECORDS.

The latest list of Victor records is a special one and is made notable by the fact that it comprises five numbers played by Victor Herbert and his orchestra. The compositions thus rendered are "The Rosary," by Nevin; Rubinstein's "Melody in F"; "Liebestraum," by Litz; Bach's "Air for G String," and Herbert's "March for the Toys," in Toyland. Those who wish to hear these records can do so by visiting the Oliver Ditson Co. store at No. 150 Tremont street.

These Herbert orchestra records are issued in a special list in advance of the regular September ones, and although only out a few days, they have already been heard by thousands of music lovers and are being enjoyed in homes all over the country.

Kryl's Bohemian Band makes its debut in Victor circles in the September list, and the first number of this noted musical organization in this form is Goldmark's famous "Sakuntala Overture." Arthur Pryor's Band is also here in three superb numbers. They are the Rachmaninoff "Prelude in C Sharp Minor," the "Druid's Prayer Waltz" and Pryor's new "rag" number, "Canhanibalmo Rag."

STORM BRINGS FARMERS JOY

The easterly storm which struck Boston two hours after midnight was a surprise to weather forecasters, because it came from off the Atlantic Ocean, and they had no warning of its approach. It extends along the coast from Norfolk, Va., to Portland, Me., and into the interior. New England farmers are pleased because it is going to help crops.

Rain began to fall at 2 o'clock and up to 10 o'clock three-fourths of an inch had fallen, which is heavy precipitation for eight hours.

There was a high easterly wind blowing and wrecks along the coast are feared. The forecast is that the wind will blow strong from the northeast or east late to-day and that there will be rain all day and to-night and probably some to-morrow. By Sunday it is expected the storm will blow over.

SCIENTIST AND PATIENT MARRY

Commander John Bish, U. S. N. (retired), who was president of the Christian Science Mother church on Norway street during 1908, was quietly married on July 20, in this city, to Miss Ida B. Gurney of Marion, a school teacher in a great mental distress, who happened to come to Boston.

There is a very pretty story of the manner in which the Marion school teacher chanced to meet Commander Blish. The latter was then, as now, a Christian Science practitioner, having [illegible] at No. 110 Boylston street.

According to the story told by a Christian Scientist who is a close friend of Commander Bish, Miss Gurney, casting about for relief for her troubles, happened to pick up a copy of the Christian Science Journal, which contains the names of leading local practitioners.

"Miss Gurney," said this informant, "glanced through the list of practitioners and the name of Commander Blish happened to catch her eye. She decided that she would appeal to Christian Science to aid her and would go to Commander Blish, which she did.

"She sought the commander, told her story and received from him sympathy and treatment. The case was a most difficult one. The patient was in a terrible condition, so much so that she hardly valued her life. Her reason and life were saved, however. She saw things in a better light.

"Then the romance developed. The commander and the school teacher had become interested in each other beyond the mere relations of practitioner and patient. Commander Blish asked Miss Gurney to become his wife and to let him share her responsibilities and sorrows. The school teacher accepted him and the marriage took place on July 20."

Commander Bish has gone to Colorado to attend a Christian Science gathering in honor of Judge Hanna, one of the most prominent Christian Science lecturers in the world. Mrs. Blish is at No. 32 Batavia street, but declines to be interviewed. She refers all queries to her husband's attorney.

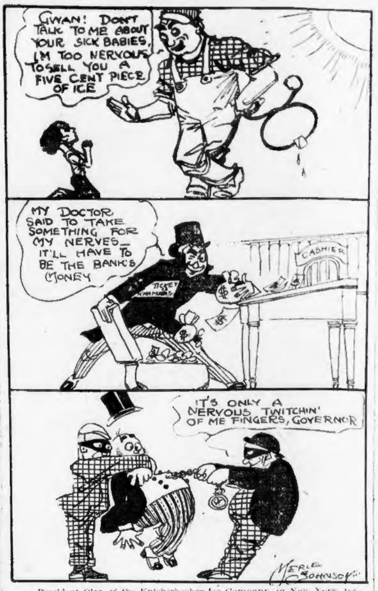
Sad Lay of the Nervous Iceman



G'WAN! DON'T TALK TO ME ABOUT YOUR SICK BABIES, I'M TOO NERVOUS TO SELL YOU A FIVE CENT PIECE OF ICE
MY DOCTOR SAID TO TAKE SOMETHING FOR MY NERVES— IT'LL HAVE TO BE THE BANK'S MONEY
CASHIER
TICKET
IT'S ONLY A NERVOUS TWITCHIN' OF ME FINGERS, GOVERNOR
MERLE JOHNSON

President Oler, of the Knickerbocker Ice Company, in New York, testified at the ice inquiry that his men got nervous and irritable at times, and added: "It is a rough business and we deal with rough men."—News Item.

The iceman put his hand to his cheek
And vowed he felt most wofully weak;
Then he lifted a chunk weighing two hundred pounds
And started off on his regular rounds;
But in his path there appeared a lass;
With face all white and eyes of glass.
"Sell me a five-cent piece," sobbed the maid;
"I can't," he creaked, "my nerves are frayed."

Back to his wagon again came he
To find a wee dealer with a wee fee;
"Oh, sir," said the dealer, "all over I've run
To get some ice at four plunks per ton."
"[illegible] to-day.
However, I don't like your looks—run away."
With some tongs he shattered the little man's head;
"Ah, me, but I'm nervous!" the iceman said.

Just then from a brownstone house there came
A man most plump, with a gilded name.
"Hey, fetch me a hundred pounds at once."
He said, "or I'll get your job, you dunce."
"Aye, aye," purred the iceman, lowly and meek.
"I'll charge you the regular rate this week.
You see, I ought really to raise the price,
But for YOU we always have cheap ice."

After which he went back to his quarters cool,
Where the heads of the firm were forming a pool;
"What luck?" asked the president, frigid with glee.
Quoth the iceman, "I've sold all my stuff, you see."
"Sold out to poor folks?" he inquired with a frown.
"Oh, no," said the iceman, "I turned 'em all down."
"Poor fellow," was all that the big boss could say,
"You're awfully nervous, rest up for the day."

ROB POLICEMAN AS HE SLEEPS

Swampscott's police department are thinking of calling a policeman. A thief is loose in that town who loots clothing while the owners are asleep in bed and spares not even the members of the police department.

When John Doherty, day patrolman, reported for duty today he was all "haired up," as they say. He said that while he was asleep in his home on Minerva street a thief sneaked into his room and took his gold watch from his vest pocket and his loose change from his trousers pocket.

Hardly had Doherty told his troubles, when Augustus Anderson, who lives opposite Doherty at No. 4 Minerva street, reported that a thief had stolen $4 from his trousers pocket and jewelry from the bureau while he and his wife were asleep.

Both thefts were committed by the same slick person the police are convinced. They felt they must round him up for their own self-protection.

MRS. DE FOREST SUES HUSBAND

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28.—Because he refused to come home from Europe on a slow boat rather than on the Lusitania, Mrs. Nora Stanton Blatch De Forest alleges cruelty on the part of her husband, Dr. Lee De Forest, the wireless inventor and expert, and asks the courts of New York to grant her a legal separation.

Word to this effect came today to Dr. De Forest, who resides in this city. The notice of the filing of the suit for separation came from Warren Wright, De Forest's attorney in New York.

The telegram bore the following information: "Complaint served, abandonment and cruelty. Am preparing answer. Will send it and copy of complaint. Cruelty consists of coming home from Europe on Lusitania instead of slow boat."

The separation suit papers followed closely upon the filing of a suit by Mrs. De Forest to compel her husband to amend a release of her dower interests in a house and lot owned by De Forest.

THIEVES RETURN DEEDS BY MAIL

Daniel F. Clifford, [illegible] of Revere, recovered through the Boston post office, today, bankbooks and deeds representing several thousand dollars in value, which were stolen with other property from his home at No. 506 Beach street, Revere, Wednesday.

The bankbooks and deeds were in a small pasteboard box. The thieves, not caring to attempt negotiation of the deeds and having courtesy enough to return them to Clifford, dropped the box, deeds and bankbooks into one of the big package collection boxes in Boston.

The package collector took the box to the Boston central postoffice, where the name of Clifford was found on the books and papers. The Boston postoffice sent a post-card to Clifford, notifying him to call for his stolen property, which he [illegible] to do to-day.

The Clifford house was entered while Mrs. Clifford and the children were on the beach. Five watches, table silver, jewelry and even the money in the children's banks were taken, in addition to the bankbooks and deeds.

SUIT MANUFACTURER IN BANKRUPTCY PLEA

A voluntary petition in bankruptcy has been filed by Herman L. Freeman, a manufacturer of suits and clothing, doing business at No. 25 Lagrange street, and living at No. 390 Northampton street. His liabilities are listed at $5,684.40 and his assets at $1,900.

SHERMAN GETS YEAR AND DAY

Smith J. Sherman, an octogenarian of Fitchburg, recently convicted of using the United States mails in a scheme to defraud, was today sentenced by Judge Dodge in the United States District Court to imprisonment in the Fitchburg jail for a year and a day. This sentence was imposed on him, rather than the one for just a year, because the court seemed to be [illegible] disposed toward the prisoner, owing to his advanced age, Sherman claiming to be seventy years of age and broken down in health. Under a [illegible] statute, prisoners serving one year or less cannot be let out on parole.

Sherman was convicted on the efforts of David A. Ellis of Springfield, administrator of the will of the late Sarah Jane Williams, former city physician of Springfield. Sherman wrote to Ellis stating that he was the only heir to the estate of the deceased and enclosed a document purporting to be a will which was made out in his favor.

IMPORTS FOR THE YEAR $29,000,000 LESS

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Imports into the United States in the fiscal year 1911 were less than in 1910, according to statistics made public today by the Department of Commerce and Labor. The value of the year's imports shows a decrease of $29,000,000 or about two per cent below imports of 1910.

POPE SUFFERS A RELAPSE

ROME, July 28.—Pope Pius suffered a slight relapse last night. Further consultations are being held to decide on some means of [illegible] his failing strength. His condition is admitted to be very serious.

The AMERICAN correspondent interviewed Professor Marchiafava who visited the Pope today and was in consultation with Professor Petacci. Professor Marchiafava said the Pope is suffering from [illegible] which has rendered respiration difficult, thereby increasing the heart trouble caused by the gout.

The pontiff has been placed on a milk diet and complete rest had been prescribed. All audiences probably will be suspended until September.

The Pope is very weak and greatly changed in appearance. He derives great comfort from the presence of his sisters.

LOWELL BUTLER HELD AS THIEF

Professor Percival Lowell, distinguished scientist and brother of President A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard University, may have to send clear to Mars to get a butler to suit him.

His last butler, Hugo Hilliner, was brought into the Cambridge District Court to-day on a charge of stealing the Professor's astronomical books and some rare curios.

Like all highly scientific men, Professor Lowell finds that science helps but little in the domestic problems. His great jinx is the butler question. The one he had before Hilliner did something which provoked the Professor so that he bundled the man out of the house, bag and baggage.

Then Hugo Hilliner came along. He seemed a treasure. He is thirty-one years, of refined appearance, speaks several languages and possesses an interest in things scientific that would just appeal to a learned man like Professor Lowell, the Harvard astronomer.

Hilliner was skilful and deferential. Professor Lowell resumed peacefully his study of the stars and their movements.

But, if he were a fortune teller as well as an astronomer, Professor Lowell might have read signs of trouble in the planets. Five days ago he noticed that some astronomical books and some curios which he had collected on his Eastern trips had disappeared. He questioned Hilliner, who quit in a huff.

Professor Lowell complained to the police, who arrested the butler just as he was to take a train for Nantucket, where he was engaged as butler for another man. The police said that in Hilliner's trunks they found the missing property.

FATHER GASSON WILL CONTINUE

Friends of Boston College will learn with pleasure that Father Thomas I. Gasson, S. J., is to continue in the presidency of the college for the collegiate year 1911-12. And they hope that his term of office will be continued longer, at least until the completion of the new college on University Heights, an undertaking to which Fr. Gasson has devoted great zeal and energy.

It is a rule of the Jesuit order that its priests be transferred at regular intervals from one college to another or from one country to another. At times there are exceptions to this rule, when the change would seem inopportune and contrary to the interests of a particular church or college. It is evident that in the opinion of Father Hanselman, S. J., provincial superior of the order, it would not be prudent to take Fr. Gasson away from Boston College until he finishes the great undertaking he has in hand.

Two widely-loved priests of Boston College and of the Church of the Immaculate Conception are going away, greatly to the sorrow of all who know them. They are Father James I. Maguire, who goes to the Island of Jamaica as assistant to the Rt. Rev. Bishop Collins, and Father Jeremiah M. Prendergast, who is sent out on missionary duty and is to be attached to the Church of St. Joseph, Philadelphia.

Other changes are Rev. Arthur McCaffray and Rev. James F. Mellyn, who both go to the house of studies at St. Andrews-on-the-Hudson.

Restless Husbands

By

David Graham Phillips

If some man or woman, with "the giftie to see oursel's as others see us," could write a personal letter to every wife possessed of a Restless Husband, what a boon it would be to mankind!

David Graham Phillips had a deep insight into human nature. Social problems always had the greatest fascination for him. He was intensely interested in what he called the topsy-turvy relations of men and women, which have ended so many apparently happy marriages in the divorce court.

In an article written shortly before his death, he deals with the subject at length, and analyzes these causes as they appeared to him.

Read his conclusions, you women with Restless Husbands—perhaps you will find his article the personal letter that exactly fits your case. Perhaps it will enable you to transform your Restless Husband into the lover of your early wedded life, and bring back to you both the happiness of your honeymoon.

would be wiped off the map of Europe because we have our difficulties at home, it may be worth saying that they bitterly mistake the temper of the British people and the patriotism of the opposition."

GERMAN EMPEROR AND CHANCELLOR CONFER TO-NIGHT

BERLIN, July 28.—It is believed in official circles that France and Germany will be able to untie the African knot by direct negotiations and without opening the doors to the participation of Great Britain and the other Powers. Rosy optimism, however, is not expressed. Chancellor von Bethmann Hollweg and probably Foreign Secretary Baron von Kiderlen Waechter leave to-day to join Emperor William, who will arrive at Swinemunde from his cruise in northern waters to-night. Definite predictions would be misplaced until after this meeting.

The Foreign Office was fully prepared for Premier Asquith's statement and now confirms that it had earlier assurances that Great Britain would not intervene so long as Germany and France were trying to settle the matter directly, and also that Chancellor Lloyd-George's speech was not meant as a veto of a Franco-German arrangement on the basis of a French Congo understanding as a section of the British press has intimated.

Premier Asquith's declaration is generally favorably received here, and it is believed in most quarters that it will immediately relieve the tension in the Moroccan question. All the newspapers publish Mr. Asquith's statement verbatim on the principal page. Some of the leading journals, however, make no editorial comment. These are chiefly the conservative Pan-German organs. The others refer briefly to passages in the British premier's statement which was considered here unnecessarily sharp.

The Liberal papers unanimously acclaim the premier's speech as one tending towards peace. The Tageblatt says: "The intimation that Great Britain has no intention of intervening in a territorial rearrangement outside of Morocco is everything that we could, from our standpoint, wish or demand."

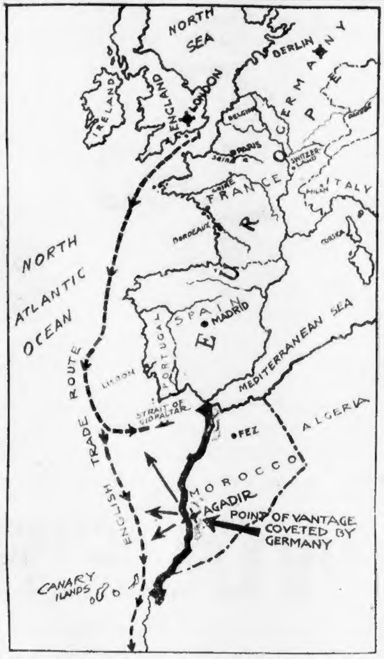
PROF. GOTTHEIL ON SITUATION IN MOROCCO

Richard Gottheil, professor of Oriental languages at Cornell, and a recognized authority on European politics, has written to the New York Sun, from Paris, a very enlightening review of the Moroccan situation. He says:

For many years things in Morocco have been going from bad to worse. Anarchy in a more or less pronounced form has held sway in most parts of the Shereefian Empire. Not only has the greater part of that empire got out of hand of the central authority at Fez, but even that portion which was more immediately under the eye of the Maghzen, and therefore, at least in semblance, under governmental control, has become the prey of rival Moroccan pretenders. Now if Morocco were in far off Arabia or in further India or in furthest China one would not feel that its condition was such a menace to the peace of Europe and of the world. It could go to pieces gradually or quickly, as the case may be; it could even be divided among the hungry European Powers craving for colonial expansion, and no upheaval in world politics would necessarily result.

But the geographical position of the country and the complexity of interests of which it is naturally the centre make it more than a mere pawn in the intricate game of chess which is being played upon the political board. It bears the same relation to many problems dealing with the West as Egypt does those of the East. Both countries are intimately connected with the concerns of Europe. Both are Mediterranean Powers, the one guards the eastern, the other the western end. And if Egypt has an additional importance because of its direct connection with Asia, it must never be forgotten that one of the faces of Morocco is turned toward South America. Herein lies the special interest that we in the United States must have in the future of Morocco.

In the gradual partition of Africa among the peoples of Europe that has been going on during the last fifty or sixty years it was inevitable that the turn of Morocco should come at no very distant day. For the peace of the world it would undoubtedly have been best if Morocco could have held its own and have transformed itself into some semblance of a modernized State.



Map of Morocco and the three European powers involved in dispute. Moroccan coast line in heavy black, with arrow pointing to Agadir, port which Germany wants. Broken line indicates course of England's great trade with South Africa and the East, which might be seriously menaced by another power's possession of the Moroccan port.

Made a National Prey.

The failure of Morocco to move forward of its own record made it a natural prey to one or the other of the great European colonizing Powers. England's commercial interests in the country have always been great, and under the Kaid Sir Harry Maclean her political fortunes there seemed to presage a further extension of British influence in the Mediterranean. But another powerful claimant was on hand; France, and her position as a great Mediterranean Power and as a neighbor to Morocco made her claim in every sense a valid one. The rivalry of these two Powers in Morocco threatened to become acute; but Egypt was in Great Britain's hands. There, too, France was the great competitor of England and to the consolidation of English influence.

To be free of this incubus was an absolute necessity. The treaty of 1904, including, as it did, reciprocal self-denying clauses—for France in Egypt and for England in Morocco—paved the way for the laying of the old conflict between the two countries in a manner that does honor to the two statesmen who carried it to a successful issue. France now believed that she had a free hand in Morocco.

An energetic forward policy would perhaps by the very reason of its audacity and daring have won the day, and France would have been able to found a large colonial empire covering the whole of the northwestern part of Africa from Tunis up to the Atlantic Ocean. But this time again internal conditions lamed the prowess of her foreign policy, as has so often been the case in France. There was M. Jean Jaures, the Socialist, and the pacifists to be reckoned with; and in order to calm their oversensitive susceptibilities a new method called "pacific penetration," economic and cultural, was adopted.

Now in the best of all possible worlds a pacific policy is certainly the wisest, as it is also the most moral. But pace the philosophers, our own is not of such a kind, and where brute force still counts for so much the nation that opposes goodness to power is bound in the long run to get the smaller end of the bargain. M. Delcasse had reckoned without his host. That host was Germany.

Germans Desire Power.

It is not the place here to discourse upon the mighty forward movement made by

"Back Down or Fight!" Declaration of Britain to Kaiser in the Morocco Situation.

Germany during the post-Bismarckian age. This is evident to the most casual of observers. Though originally the dream of becoming a great world power, or perhaps the greatest, was the personal property of the Kaiser Wilhelm, it has now become the most intimate desire of all Germans, whether they call themselves Pan-Germanists or not.

I suppose that if I were a German I would hold to it root and branch. A vigorous and capable nation, admirably trained both physically and intellectually, which has carried the scientific method of the university into all phases of public and commercial life, is bound to overstep its natural limits and to seek outlets in all corners of the globe for its surplus population and its superabundant energy. Such a dream, such a doctrine, does honor to a nation's courage and to its strength of character, however disagreeable this may be to its older brothers in the race.

THINKS KAISER WILL DO BEST TO PRESERVE PEACE

CHICAGO, July 28.—The London correspondent of the Chicago Daily News telegraphs that the question uppermost in the minds of the men in control of the British policy is: What will the Kaiser do relative to Morocco? He quotes "a prominent supporter of the British government" as saying:

"We believe that Emperor William is pacific. Everything we know about him confirms us in this faith, and to think otherwise is to assume that he has been capable through a long series of years of playing a studied game of duplicity and fraud. Warlike developments on the part of the Kaiser now would show up his visits to England and his pretensions while here as systematic impostures, designed to betray us into weakening our means of defense.

"No pacific man could approve the methods of Herr von Kiderlen-Wachter, the German Foreign Secretary. Pacific men do not argue with warships. Pacific men, having dispatched an armed vessel by way of a prelude, do not demand huge tracts of other people's property. These are provocative acts, pure and simple. Germany's behavior in this instance has astounded every Government in Europe. The Kaiser will reach home soon, and then look out for some token of reason and also of decent manners beyond the North Sea."

"Do you believe that Chancellor Lloyd-George made a mistake in his outspoken declaration at the Mansion House?" was asked.

"Indeed, he did not," was the reply.

HUNNEMAN HITS TARIFF BOARD

WASHINGTON, July 28.—A scathing arraignment of the tariff board is made in a letter which has been sent to Senator Lodge of Massachusetts by William C. Hunneman of No. 60 Congress street, Boston. Political activity for President Taft on the part of the members is alleged.

The letter is in reply to one of Senator Lodge, in which the latter says he thinks there will be no revision of the wool schedule until the report of the tariff board.

Saying the Republican party pledged itself in 1908 to revise the tariff and has neglected that duty, so far as schedule K is concerned, and criticising Senator Lodge for approving further delay, Mr. Hunneman attacks the tariff board "for intentionally wasting time and delaying its work."

HOLD MAN ACCUSED BY ALGONQUIN WAITER

Charged with assault and battery and robbing Edward Springer, a waiter of the Algonquin Club, living at No. 274 Athens street, South Boston, with two other men, on the night of July 18, George E. Dolliver, of No. 748 East Fifth street, South Boston, was arraigned to-day in South Boston District Court. He pleaded not guilty and was held in $500 for the Superior Court. Springer made the acquaintance of the three men in the Peninsular Hotel, at City Point, and was induced to go to a vacant lot and there brutally beaten and robbed. In court he positively identified Dolliver. The other two men concerned in the assault were not captured.

AMBASSADOR BACON DETAINED BY TREATY

PARIS, July 28.—Robert Bacon, the American Ambassador to France, had planned to sail on the steamship Provence from Havre to-morrow for New York on a leave of absence, but the negotiations for the Franco-American arbitration treaty not being concluded has postponed his departure. Mrs. Bacon and their son, Robert L. Bacon, will go on La Provence.

COMMERCE MEN IN OLD VIENNA

VIENNA, July 28.—Fresh from the delights and their educational studies of Munich, Mayor Fitzgerald and the Boston Chamber of Commerce delegation are in this "Wonder City" of Europe and prepared for a strenuous campaign of municipal and private hospitality which is likely to tax to the limit the endurance of every member of the party.

An elaborate program which started early to-day has been laid out for the Boston folks. They will inspect the wonderful system of 274 parks, the municipal pawn broking and public auction establishments, the municipal gas and electricity plants, the splendid arts and crafts schools, and a public hospital accommodating 2,000 patients. A detailed program has been laid out for the party by the American Consul and the Vienna Chamber of Commerce, and automobile tours and dinners will be features of the visit.

Fred J. McIsaac, special correspondent of the Boston AMERICAN, is writing vivid articles about what the Chamber of Commerce party is seeing abroad. Read his article in next Sunday's AMERICAN.

NO CHOLERA SIGNS FOUND IN BOSTON

Dr. Francis X. Mahoney of the Boston Board of Health to-day declared that there is not a single case of Asiatic cholera or cholera carrier in this city.

The bacteriological experts in charge of the tests being made on the 141 Russian, Austrian and Syrian immigrants taken from the Cymric and confined on Gallops [illegible] also made an equally favorable report to-day. Dr. Mahoney declares that every tenement house district in the city has been given a thorough going over and that the vigilance of the health officers will not be relaxed in any way.

SCORE FLEE BLAZE IN TENEMENT HOUSE

More than a score of persons fled from the four-story brick tenement house at No. 19 Greenough lane, off Commercial street, North End, to-day, when the cry of "Fire" was given by a man on the first floor. The stairways were blocked for a time with excited women and children. Before the fire apparatus arrived a plumber had extinguished the blaze, caused by a leaking gas pipe.

BOSTON & EASTERN ASKS FOR PERMITS

The Boston & Eastern electric road has sought for municipal or town approval of its route in Boston, Chelsea, Revere, Saugus, Lynn, Peabody, Salem and Beverly, through which its main line will run, and to Danvers, where a branch from Peabody will be built. A director of the new road said to-day that successful financeering of the Boston & Eastern is assured.

AEROPLANES TO ATTACK FLEET

PROVINCETOWN, July 28.—Army aeroplanes will theoretically battle against the battleships of the North Atlantic fleet here in the first real naval experiments on the effectiveness of rapid-firing guns mounted at high angles against the cavalry of the sky.

It became known to-day that at least a half dozen of the most expert aviators in the United States army have reported to Rear Admiral Osterhaus, commanding the fleet, and that a number of the aeroplanes owned by the War Department will be sent here for the experiments, which will begin the latter part of next month.

The army aviators, among whom was Lieutenant John Powers, who is considered one of the most expert in the service, reported to Admiral Osterhaus under orders from the War Department. This means that army and navy will join forces for the first time in ascertaining just how far the theory that an aeroplane or a number of them could sink a fleet by hovering over the huge ships and dropping bombs or high explosives on their decks is founded on fact. It also will settle the question of how effective small-calibered rapid-firing guns on shipboard will be against aeroplanes.

QUIZ DETECTIVE IN LORIMER CASE

WASHINGTON, July 27.—Thomas McGuire of the McGuire & White Detective Agency of Chicago, was cross examined to-day by Judge Hanecy before the Lorimer Investigating Committee. McGuire told in detail of his connection with the Charles A. White confession. Judge Hanecy tried to establish the fact that McGuire was employed by the Chicago Tribune and not by State's Attorney Wayman. McGuire asserted that before he undertoook the investigation of the White matter for the State's attorney, he received full release from the Chicago Tribune and was in no way connected with it.

The Following Statement by Charles H. Jones Appeared in the Shoe & Leather Reporter, May 24th, 1906

Was He Telling the Truth Then or Is He Telling the Truth Now?

The Policy of the United Shoe Machinery Company Has Not Changed.

BILL RELATING TO MACHINERY LEASES.

Many Interesting Points Brought Out in Interview With Charles H. Jones, President of the Commonwealth Shoe and Leather Company.

Charles H. Jones, president of the Commonwealth Shoe and Leather Company of Boston, with factories at Whitman, Mass., and in Maine, in an interview concerning the bill now before the Massachusetts Legislature, numbered 1297, in relation to the lease of machinery, alleged to be directed against the United Shoe Machinery Co., said:

My attention was called especially to this bill yesterday morning by a neighbor, whose factories are not in the State of Massachusetts, with the request that I read the bill carefully and see where it was going to place Massachusetts manufacturers. Previous to that time I had only heard through newspaper reports that such a bill had passed the House, and, presuming that it would be in some ways a benefit to the trade, had given it no further attention, but on looking it over with care it was soon apparent that while it was probably directed against the United Shoe Machinery Co., it would prove in fact, if passed, a serious blow to Massachusetts shoe manufacturers.

REPLIES OF MR. JONES TO QUESTIONS SUBMITTED.

Q. Would it not be an advantage to the manufacturers if they could obtain, by legislature, free competition in shoe machinery, instead of the practical monopoly that is now understood to exist?

A. Anything would undoubtedly be a benefit to the shoe trade of Massachusetts that enabled them to obtain their shoe machinery cheaper, or on more favorable terms, and if this bill was calculated to produce this result, you may be sure it would have the warmest support of all shoe manufacturers. Its actual result in practice, however, would be exactly the opposite.

Q. To anyone not acquainted with the shoe business, this last statement seems very surprising. Would you mind explaining how it would operate against the interests of manufacturers here?

A. I shall be very glad to explain it, as I think every manufacturer in Massachusetts should be fully aware of the risk he is running if this bill becomes a law. If you will read the bill, you will find in substance that it forbids the United Shoe Machinery Co. from trying to bind, either by lease or by the giving of discounts, manufacturers to use their machinery exclusively. If this means anything, it means that if the United Shoe Machinery Co. sell or lease their machinery at prices so low, or on terms so favorable, that manufacturers are compelled by their own interest to buy all their machinery of them, then under this law competing machinery manufacturers may show that such prices and discounts are unreasonable and force the company to advance them. If competition was to be promoted by causing some dealers to sell us our machinery on better terms, shoe manufacturers would be very glad to assist in passing the bill; but if present conditions are to be changed by compelling the United Shoe Machinery Co. to ask as much for their machinery as competing manufacturers see fit to ask, it means simply that we should have to pay more for our shoe machinery than we now pay, and we do not wish to have the state of Massachusetts force us, by law, to do any such thing. Of course, the word "unreasonable" as applied to discounts on machinery or royalties is one which I cannot apply with any exactness, and so, of course, do not know what discount would be considered unreasonable and what would be considered reasonable; but I wish to obtain, both on machinery and royalties, the greatest possible discount, and do not want my privilege to do this to be curtailed by any law of the state.

Of course, the proposed law would have no effect outside of the state of Massachusetts, and, if it should pass, the United Shoe Machinery Co. would be undoubtedly put to some inconvenience and trouble in readjusting their leases to comply with the change in the law. It is inconceivable, however, that in its readjustment the manufacturers of Massachusetts would be allowed by them to obtain an advantage over the manufacturers in other states. The practical effect of the law would undoubtedly be this. The policy of the Machinery Company would remain unchanged the world over, except in the case of Massachusetts. In this state we should be put to some disadvantage; how great or how little it is impossible for any one to foresee today, but it is clearly evident that whatever inconvenience and increased expense the machinery company was caused by this bill, we manufacturers should have to pay.

Q. If that would be the result of the bill to shoe manufacturers, can you tell what interest is back of the bill? Who originated it and who is backing it for passage?

A. Of that I can only speak from hearsay. It is obvious that the only parties benefited would be the manufacturers of machinery who desire to compete with the United Shoe Machinery Co. The terms which the Machinery Co. have recently offered their patrons on certain lines of machinery are so liberal that the outsiders cannot compete. They apparently wish the company to be forced by law to change these terms to their level, and as the parties who would derive the benefit are usually the ones who cause the legislation, I think it is fair to assume that the statements which are publicly made, that the outside shoe machinery interests are back of this bill, are correct. It is certain that the shoe manufacturers, either individually or as a body, are not back of it. I personally never heard of it until after it had passed the House of Representatives, and in conversation with other manufacturers, during the past two days, have not found a single man who had ever been consulted, or, in fact, had any knowledge whatever in regard to it.

Q. Is it not a fact, as claimed by the advocates of this bill, that the Shoe Machinery Co. is very arbitrary in its dealings with the shoe manufacturers, and that its large earnings are a heavy tax on the industry?

A. There are, undoubtedly, some clauses in the different leases which manufacturers are required to sign with the Machinery Co. that give the impression that the company desires to bind the manufacturers, and limit them in their business action to an unreasonable extent. At the time of the organization of the Machinery Co. I resented very deeply what seemed to me the extreme and unfair advantage they were taking of the power which they undoubtedly held over shoe manufacturers; but in the six or seven years during which they have been in operation, I must say that I have waited in vain for any unfair or arbitrary use of this power on the part of the company; in fact, their dealings with us have been marked by more consideration than was formerly shown us by many of the constituent companies. It is a fact that must not be overlooked, that if the company is a despotism, it has been, up to this time, of the most benevolent type. It has actually reduced the prices on many of its machines; it has placed others in our hands on a rental system that has saved us a very large investment of capital; it has certainly given more faithful care and attention to the running of the machines and keeping them in order; and in our country factories, where we employ a large proportion of inexperienced help, they have given us more constant and faithful attention in instructing new operators, and in the supervision of the machinery under trying conditions, than we ever obtained from any of the constituent companies.

Q. Has the charge for such service as you describe been increased over what you formerly paid?

A. I cannot say that it has. As far as I recall them, the royalties demanded by the company are the same, exactly in amount, that we have always paid. It is only fair to add that they have supplied us with many additional machines to do the minor parts of the work, without any charge at all. These machines have been of considerable value to us, both in the saving of labor and increasing the uniformity of the goods, and are such machines as would undoubtedly have cost us a round sum if the United Shoe Machinery Co. had not been in position to furnish them to us gratis.

Q. The newspaper reports of the hearing at the Legislature made quite prominent the statement that exorbitant prices have been charged by the company for supplies. The prices of tacks and nails in the open market and the price charged by the Shoe Machinery Co. were compared. Do these statements show the facts as they actually exist?

A. I did not see the statements, and so cannot answer that question; but if you wish to know whether the company is charging us an unfair price for tacks and nails, will say that this is entirely untrue. The royalty on some of their machines is derived from the price of the tacks and nails used on them; consequently, the price which they charge for the tacks and nails is certainly greater than the same thing could be bought in the market, for use by hand; but, as a matter of fact, the Shoe Machinery Co. charges us no more for tacks today than they did many years ago, when tacks in the open market were much cheaper than today; in fact, my impression is that they have actually reduced the price of tacks between 25 and 30 percent, while every one knows that the cost of tacks and nails in the open market has advanced.

Also in regard to eyelets, which they now manufacture extensively, we are paying them from 10 to 20 percent less than we formerly paid, although it is perfectly well known that the copper and spelter from which they are manufactured have advanced in price nearly 50 percent since 1899.

Q. You do not seem to be one of the manufacturers who regard this trust as one of the burdens on the industry?

A. I must say that is not my view today. I am by no means convinced that all their methods are the best, or that their policies might not be changed to make them more liberal in some respects; but I am very glad to say that the expectations I had of what was to be the result of this combination when it was formed have not been borne out by our experience. Up to this time, I do not believe any manufacturer who has been honest and straightforward in his dealings with the company, can show any clear grievance against the company, or can make out the slightest case of crowding or coercion. On the contrary, I can say for ourselves, that the question of royalties and machinery, which was formerly one of the most vexatious and exacting departments of our business, has ceased to give us any concern at all. We were formerly obliged to examine new inventions, and were forced to make experiments with machines for months at a time, with the result that we obtained more or less bad work and were put to much useless expense, and the thought and attention of our best men was given to deciding between the merits of the old and the new. We were obliged to dicker and trade with every different manufacturer of machinery all the time, with the moral certainty that somebody who had more time and attention to give to it would get a better bargain than we were able to obtain; and with it all there was an enormous and perpetual shrinkage on account of the changes made necessary by the introduction and adoption of machinery that was not thoroughly and satisfactorily developed before being placed on the market. Today this is all changed. If we want a machine, we simply notify the company. Their agent confers with our foreman. The best machine known for doing the work is installed with little or no expense to us. We are obliged to pay a rental in some cases, which would amount to about the same as the yearly shrinkage in value of the machine if we had had to buy it, but the capital which we would formerly have been called upon to invest is still in our possession for use in our regular business. We are confident that we are getting the machine on as favorable terms as any competitor, and we are enabled to employ our own time and ability in the legitimate branches of our business, and we have not, up to this time, been obliged to pay as much for this privilege as we formerly paid, for the very much less satisfactory condition. It may be true that the Shoe Machinery Co. suppresses inventions, but my own experience with outside manufacturers during the past five or six years has gone quite a way toward convincing me that the outside inventor gets all the consideration from the company to which he is entitled. We have encouraged a few of them that we thought had good things, only to be sold out by them as soon as they could make a satisfactory trade with the company.

I think it is quite likely that the company buys and pays a good price for all that is valuable in the way of invention that is offered to them, and they certainly stand between the manufacturer and the inventor of crude and incomplete machines, and guarantee to us that whatever is put on the market is a complete mechanical contrivance, capable of doing what they recommend. I have heard it stated that one of the strongest advocates before the Legislature for the passage of this bill was a man who had failed to force the Machinery Company to pay him a salary of $5000 a year for services which were worth nothing like that amount. This is perhaps what they call suppressing invention.

Q. In your opinion, would this bill be a serious blow to the Machinery Company if passed?

A. It would certainly cause them some inconvenience, in readjusting their leases and royalties, to comply with the change in the law, but nothing can prevent a company which has machinery of such value as theirs from making arrangements with manufacturers who desire to use it, which will be profitable to them. This bill will certainly not prevent them from doing this. They will accomplish exactly what they accomplish now in another way, and the manufacturer will simply have to pay the cost of the change. If it should prove, on the passage of this bill, that manufacturers in other states were able to get their machinery on more favorable terms, we should certainly know of it, as we have two factories located in the state of Maine. The margin on shoes today is so small, that even a fraction of the royalty we pay would necessitate our removing our factories from Massachusetts to Maine, or some other state, and I can see no way in which such a result as this would be a benefit to Massachusetts or any of her people.

The United Shoe Machinery Company. L. A. Coolidge, Treasurer.

ROMANCE AND TRAGEDY IN THE GREAT BEATTIE AUTO MYSTERY, TOLD IN PICTURES

Henry Clay Beattie, Jr., son of a banker of Manchester, Va., meets Beulah Binford when she is thirteen and takes a great liking to her. With the consent of her parents he sends her to school.

Last August Beattie ceased his attentions to her and married Louise Wilford Owen, daughter of R. V. Owen, a wealthy resident of Dover, Del. Beulah Binford was present, heavily veiled.

A few weeks ago Beattie again encountered Beulah Binford. She says that on July 18 he told her he would elope with her after the death of his father-in-law. That evening he invited his wife to go auto riding.

Beattie next appeared at the home of Ben P. Owen, uncle of Mrs. Beattie. He was driving his auto with one hand and holding the body of his wife with the other. He said a stranger shot his wife.

His story of the shooting by the strange man was not believed and he was arrested, charged with having killed his wife. Beulah Binford and Beattie's cousin, Paul Beattie, were held as material witnesses.

NEW CLEW IN BEATTIE TRAGEDY

Hairpin Found Near Scene of Wife's Death May Connect Beulah Binford with Crime.

RICHMOND, Va., July 28.—The discovery of a light colored hairpin on the spot where Mrs. Henry C. Beattie, Jr., met her death, gave the police a new line of questioning Beulah Binford, the girl in the case, where Beattie stands accused of slaying his wife.

The fact that the color of the pin accords with the light straw colored tresses of Beulah Binford tells the story, the State detectives say. With the hairpin in their possession, the detectives began a third degree examination of the girl, which was so grueling Judge R. Carter Scott of the Henrico County Court visited the jail to voice his displeasure at the method used.

It is reported that the detectives wrung from the girl admissions which bring out additional motives for the slaying of his young wife by Beattie. According to these reports, the girl was told there was "still another woman" in young Beattie's life. She flew into a jealous rage and replied if he had been going with other women she would tell all she knew. The detectives then adroitly drew from her, according to report, much material to strengthen the chain of evidence they have forged against the prisoner.

She is alleged to have admitted young Mrs. Beattie had threatened to expose her husband to his father and to show grounds for a divorce. Young Beattie has been a pampered son of a rich man and did not want to risk having his allowance cut off, according to the police theory.

Detectives claim to have found a witness who heard a woman's screams on the night of the murder followed by the report of a gun and the tooting of an automobile horn. When the witness gained the roadside the auto had disappeared. Beattie has said that after the shot was fired by the highwayman that killed his wife he shouted for help and tooted his horn for some little time.

Mrs. Beattie had a premonition of danger. When her husband arrived in the automobile to take her for a spin on the Midlothian Turnpike, Mrs. Beattie invited others to go, but her husband sullenly refused to permit it.

Elements in Virginia Tragedy Make the Case Outrival Any of Poe's Weirdest Tales.

By DOROTHY DIX.

RICHMOND, Va., July 28.—It is a pity that Richmond cannot summon from the shades of her famous son, Edgar Allan Poe, whose ingenious brain devised the greatest detective stories ever written, to solve the inscrutable murder with which she is now confronted. Certainly nothing less than the acumen of an August Dupin is needed to unravel the mystery surrounding the slaying of Young Mrs. Henry Clay Beattie as she was automobiling alone with her husband on the Midlothian Turnpike on the evening of July 18.

It is just such a weird case as the morbid genius of Poe delighted in inventing—a murder weirdly inexplicable because of its lack of purpose and to some extent lack of motive.

A sweet and lovely young woman without an enemy in the world is shot down, without a word of warning, as she takes a pleasure ride with her husband.

There's no possible motive of revenge or hatred or robbery to account for the taking of the woman's life. Every clew that is unearthed seems to point to the husband as the murderer. He is arrested and thrown into jail, yet the only motive that can be assigned for suspecting him of having committed such a crime is that he wanted to be free to spend more time with a girl with whom he was infatuated.

Common sense recoils from such a suggestion. Why should a man soil his hands with his wife's blood, and run the risk of his own life by killing her, when every railroad train offered him an avenue of escape if he was tired of her, and divorce is cheap and common.

The lack of any plausible motive for slaying his wife is the best defence that Henry C. Beattie has to offer. It will save him, if anything does, by the sheer force of human conviction that no man could have done such a deed without more reason. It is the very simplicity of this murder that is its most baffling feature, and that needs an August Dupin to solve it.

Believe Husband Guilty.

Nevertheless, in spite of the lack of motive that Henry Beattie had for killing his wife, all Richmond believes him guilty of the crime. It is grimly suggestive that neither the dead woman's family, though they are well off and prominent people, nor the Mayor nor the Governor have offered a dollar reward for the apprehension of the possible murderer. This is because they feel so certain that the assassin is already behind steel bars and in the clutches of the law.

There is no other topic of conversation in Richmond to-day than this strange and piteous murder of a young woman, and those who tell you of it marshall together in a grim array circumstantial evidence against Henry Beattie that ends with the queer, dramatic touch of the bloodhounds.

These dogs were taken to the spot where the girl wife was slain and who sniffed at her blood, still red in the road, then lifted up their heads and bayed without moving in their tracks. They refused to take any scent that left the place, and it was as if they cried aloud that the murderer was there and that it was useless to look further.

Bloodhounds Accusers.

These Virginia bloodhounds are wonderful dogs trained to track criminals. Never before had they failed to pick a scent and follow it hot mouthed over field and wood. But in this case they stood stock still on the fresh trail, on the spot where Henry Beattie and his dead wife had been a few hours before, and Richmond accepts this dumb evidence that there was a third party present as final proof of Beattie's guilt.

Certainly, except for lack of adequate motive, the case is black enough against the man, and those who charge him with having deliberately killed his wife call attention to these things:

First—That Beattie never seemed to have any affection for his wife, who was a singularly pretty, sweet and lovable woman. From the very beginning of their marriage he neglected her and was openly unfaithful to her and at the time of the tragedy he was planning to furnish a flat for his former flame, Beulah Binford. Mrs. Beattie had borne herself toward him with great patience and forbearance, and since the birth of her baby she and her mother had been staying at her uncle's, Tom Owens, while Beattie remained home. Nor had Beattie been attentive in his visits to her as one might have looked for from a proud young husband and the father of a five weeks old baby.

Second—That Beattie has shown no more emotion or regret over the death of his wife than if she had been a dog. He is the coolest, calmest, apparently least concerned person in all Richmond over a tragedy that has shocked all. He has not even expressed horror at the manner of her slaying, or voiced any desire to be avenged on the person who perpetrated such a brutal crime. If he is innocent, why is he not grieved over the death that left him widowed and his child motherless?

Third—Why did Beattie, who was a man of abundant leisure, employ his cousin, Paul, a poor, weak, foolish creature, to purchase a second-hand shotgun for him, why did he not buy it himself, as nine hundred and ninety-nine men out of one thousand would do? And why should Paul buy only three cartridges for the gun unless there was some one specific use to which it was to be put?

Fourth—By what inexplicable chance did the highwayman, or the angry farmer that Beattie says he met on the Pike, have this very gun that Paul had bought and that he says he gave to his cousin Henry?

Weird Tragedy Story.

Certainly it is a strange, wild story, that of the night of the murder. Mrs. Beattie, as had been stated, was staying with her uncle and aunt at her pretty, shady cool farmhouse on the Midlothian turnpike. Her husband had phoned her that he was coming to see her and take her motoring, and that he wanted to see her alone to talk over private matters.

The hour he had set came, passed, and he did not arrive. So finally, being still weak and feeble from her recent illness, Mrs. Beattie went to bed.

Finally Beattie came, explaining that he had been delayed by tire trouble with his machine. The wife protested it was too late to go riding, but he insisted, and fearing to arouse his terrible temper, she finally put a man's yellow raincoat over her nightclothes and accompanied him.

A suspicious circumstance to be noted here is that a milkman, passing along the same road earlier in the evening, had seen Beattie's auto just where the murder was committed, and had noticed Beattie coming from behind some bushes, enter his machine and drive away toward town. It is believed that it was then Beattie hid the gun with which he afterward shot his wife.

What happened on that ride between himself and wife only Beattie knows. They may have quarreled. She may have reproached him with his conduct to other women. She may have threatened to expose and disgrace him. There may have been nothing to warn her of danger. People who know her say she was marvellously patient with his faults, and the manner of her wound would seem to show that her face was unsuspiciously turned toward the person who shot her and who was not more than six or eight inches from her.

She was barbarously slain, shot under the left eye, so close that her face was hideously mangled.

No better spot could have been selected by an assassin for such a crime. The Midlothian turnpike is a road that runs from South Richmond to the coal mines at Midlothian. It is little travelled even in day time and at night is practically deserted. Most of the farm houses are set well back from the road, which is bordered much of the way by scrub oak and pine thickets. The country people go to bed early. Eleven o'clock at night is as late with them as 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning in a city.

Story of "Highwayman."

According to Henry Beattie he was driving along this lonely and deserted spot when suddenly a heavy set, bearded man appeared out of the bushes at the side of the road. Beattie says he stopped his machine, although automobilists are not accustomed to do such a thing for pedestrians and that the man stood five feet from the machine. The man cursed him, so Beattie says, and as he leaned to throw on his clutch and start his machine, the man raised his gun and fired in Mrs. Beattie's face.

Beattie says he sprang from the machine and fought with his assailant, wrenching the gun out of his hands, whereupon the man fled into the bushes. Beattie then threw the gun into the tonneau of the machine. As he did so he perceived his wife had been killed. He put his arm about her and supported her with his left arm and drove with his right hand to Mrs. Beattie's uncle's.

Two strange points present themselves in this condition. Although there are at least twenty farmhouses on the road Beattie travelled under such ghastly conditions, there was not one at which he stopped and asked for aid. Nor was his coat stained with blood, although Mrs. Beattie was one mass of blood.

Soon Recovered Nerve.

Arriving at the Owen home, Beattie began screaming as he came through the gate, "My God, Louise is killed; my God, Louise is killed."

The horrified family rushed out to receive the terrible burden that was taken from the auto, and Beattie threw himself on a bed, but in a few minutes he arose calm, self-contained, cool as he has ever been since. He told about the man with the gun, and that he had thrown the gun into the machine, and when it was not found there, suggested it jolted out and later led in a search for it.

This is one of the most remarkable features of the case, for this gun, which has been identified by the pawnbroker as the one he sold to Paul Beattie, is the most vital bit of evidence against him, yet Henry Beattie made either no effort to conceal it, or such a poor, abortive one, it was easily found.

It was he who suggested it might have fallen out of the machine when he crossed the railroad tracks, and it was found there, only in a position that seemed physically impossible for it to have fallen off itself. It was thirty feet or more from the roadway.

The gun which has played such a sinister part in the tragedy is an old one, easily recognizable. It is a one-barrel shotgun, that has been broken and mended by being glued and tacked by two brass screws. There was no possibility that the pawnbroker who sold it could be mistaken about it or about his recognition of Paul as the purchaser, and Paul swears that he bought the gun for Henry, and that Henry gave him the money to pay for it and that he turned it over to Henry.

Brother Not Suspected.

Strangely enough, although he is held as a witness in regard to the gun, every one, including the police, eliminate Paul Beattie from the list of possible murderers. He is an epileptic, an amiable weakling, who lacks the courage and initiative, even if he had the willingness, to become a hired assassin.

But the heart of the mystery centres around the gun. Why did Henry Beattie get another to buy a gun for him, and how did this gun come, as he claims, into the hands of a murderous stranger on the highway at night.?

No one can be found who can answer these questions, and so the murder of the Midlothian Turnpike needs for its solution the hand of the genius who solved the murder of the Rue Morgue.

BELL BOY SAYS HE KILLED MAN

NEW YORK, July 28.—The mysterious murder of William Henry Jackson, seventy three years old, a Wall Street broker, descendant of a fine old family, and gentle, generous and kind, in his apartments at the Hotel Iroquois in West Forty-fourth street, was cleared up to-day by the arrest and confession of Paul Geidel, a discharged bellboy.

Geidel told the police that his mother and sister live in Farmington, Ct. His father is dead.

"I killed Mr. Jackson so as to get money to send to my mother and sister. They haven't any money and needed some," he told Deputy Police Commissioner Doherty.

Geidel is seventeen years old, with light hair, and is about five feet, seven inches tall. In his confession to the police he declared that he strangled Jackson into submission and then smothered him to death with chloroform.

Jackson had been dead several hours before the crime was discovered, although there was a terrific struggle in the room, which is separated by only a thin partition from the apartments of District Attorney Whitman, who, with Mrs. Whitman, was asleep at the time.

The confession follows:

I went to the Iroquois and went up the stairway to the tenth floor and went to Mr. Jackson's apartment. I had a key to the rooms, but saw a light in them and knew Mr. Jackson must be in, so I could not use the key. I climbed up to a window leading from the corridor into Mr. Jackson's bathroom. Then I grabbed a wash rag in the bathroom and ran into the bedroom. Mr. Jackson was lying on the bed undressed. I clapped the rag over his face and we had a struggle. I struck him with my fist and knocked him off the bed onto the floor.

He kept fighting away from me, calling all the time. I finally stunned him and got the rag over his face and he quieted down. Then I went to the bureau and took his watch and chain and some money that was on the clock. There was a $5 bill and $1.75 in quarters. I looked through the pockets of his clothing hanging on a chair but finding no more money, I took two of his handkerchiefs.

Pawned Victim's Watch.

Then I thought I heard some one coming. I opened the door and looked out, but there was no one there. Then I left the door open but I went out the way I had come in—through the bathroom window. Then I went down the stairs and went out.

This morning I pawned the watch in a place in Park Row near the bridge. I threw the cuff buttons into the sewer. My shirt was filled with blood, so I threw it in an ash barrel somewhere between Eighth avenue Broadway. My suit was stained with blood and I took it to a tailor on Forty Seventh street.

The bellboy, who is one of the dandified type seen about Broadway hotels, claims that he did not intend to slay Mr. Jackson, but that his whole object was robbery. Geidel was arrested at No. 247 West Fiftieth street. Later Mrs. Josephine Kane, who purchased the chloroform used by Geidel, and her husband, Edward Kane, a hair dresser, and Patrick G. McGrane, twenty-three years old, were taken into custody as material witnesses. Geidel and McGrane, both of whom came to New York from Hartford, Ct., rented a room in the apartment from Mr. and Mrs. Kane.

Traced Through Bottle.

Mrs. Kane, in a statement to the police declared she bought chloroform to kill a dog and that Geidel stole it from the house. The bellboy, in his confession, exonerated Mrs. Kane, her husband and McGrane from any knowledge of the murder or the plot.

The clew which led to the capture of the murderer was the chloroform bottle which Geidel had and which was found soon after the discovery of the crime.

AD MEN TO SEE LATEST STYLES

Thanks to the 5,000 advertising men and their guests now on their way to Boston for the great national convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of America, woman will know her fate in the hands of those who decree styles weeks in advance of the usual time set for Fall style displays. It's about this time of the year that the well-dressed woman is asking: "What will the Fall styles be? Are there to be harem skirts and hobbles or hoopskirts and bloomers?"

You see, among womankind, where so much depends upon the prevailing modes, it's a pretty big question. So the Boston merchants have realized, and as Boston is one of the greatest style centres of the country, they have decided to let the advertising men and their wives and daughters take home to all parts of this continent the very latest style impressions of what are bound to be the prevailing modes for Fall and Winter.

One of the large department stores will decorate its windows twice a day during the ad men's convention next week. Other large department stores have already promised the committee special displays. All stores will fly the American flag in honor of the ad men's presence in the city.

NERVOUSNESS

This Man Took His Wife's Advice and Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and Was Cured.

Mr. Harry Bemis is a well-known resident of Pine street, Granville, N. Y. His complete recovery from nervousness through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills should convince every sufferer of the value of this remedy.

"I had been feeling badly for a long time," says Mr. Bemis, "and finally was compelled to quit work on account of my ill health. I had been working hard and my trouble was at first extreme nervousness, then my sight became affected and I consulted an oculist who was also an M. D. He told me that I had, as he worded it, a shock of paralysis. He treated me for some time but I received no benefit and so went to another physician. I can hardly describe how nervous I was at this time. Even slight noises would almost make me wild. My mouth was drawn so that I could scarcely eat and one eye was affected so I could hardly see. I had very little use of my limbs and was almost a complete wreck.

"The doctor failed to help me and I followed my wife's advice and took Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. She had used the same remedy herself with the most gratifying results and she persuaded me to try them when it appeared that the doctors were unable to help me.

"The pills acted very quickly in my case. I became less and less nervous and took the pills until I was entirely well. They worked wonders for me and I am glad to help others by telling of my cure."

There is absolutely no way of reaching the nerves with medicine except through the blood. The nerves receive all of their nourishment and support from the blood which, under healthful conditions, carries the elements needed to rebuild wasted nerve tissue.

Every person who is interested in the home treatment of nervous disorders should send for a new edition of our booklet entitled, "Diseases of the Nervous System, Their Nature, Symptoms and Treatment." Address the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain no harmful or habit-forming drugs, and the sufferer who gives them a trial will avoid the danger so common in taking drugs which only deaden pain.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50 by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

RED SOX-BROWN GAME CALLED OFF

By R. W. LARDNER.

The doubleheader which was to have been played between the Red Sox and Browns at the Huntington Avenue Grounds to-day, was called off shortly before noon by President John I. Taylor. Two games will be pulled off to-morrow afternoon, beginning at 1:30, and two more on Monday at the same hour.

The St. Louis Browns, who have won less games than any other big league club except our own Boston Rustlers, are here for five battles on the Huntington avenue grounds.

Now, every fair-minded person will admit that the Browns, as at present constituted, are not as classy a ball team as are the Red Sox. On paper, they ought not to beat Pat Donovan's bunch more than once a season. Also on paper, the Red Sox ought to take to-morrow's double header and the other three games, for, while St. Louis is battling here, New York and Chicago will be trying to decide six contests on the Hilltop.

But the Browns didn't bring with them the intention to drop five games. On the contrary, they actually have the nerve to hope for better than an even break. And when you get down to actual facts, there is a lot of ground for their hope.

Red Sox Has Odd Game.

The two teams have met eleven times this season. The Sox have whipped St. Louis six times, and the Browns have copped five from Boston. That's a pretty nearly even thing. Furthermore, Bobby Wallace's boys grabbed two out of three when they were here in June, and they weren't a particle stronger then than they are now.

They were probably weaker, as a matter of fact, for they had a first baseman who hardly came up to big league requirements, although he could hit that pill. Black is now holding down the job at first base and rumor has it that he is an improvement over Rowan. Boston will be able to judge better when it has had a chance to look him over.

"Red" Nelson, who is quite a pitcher, wasn't avilable when the Browns visited us before. He is taking his regular turn now, and that makes the staff look stronger. Barney Pelty, Mitchell and Jack Powell are other standbys on Wallace's string, and they're likely to give any team a battle.

However, the Red Sox realize that it means a lot to them to give these Brownies a sound thrashing this time, and they will try harder than ever before. They will need all the victories they can possibly get in the next three days, for the Tigers will follow the Browns here and they will be just as hungry as ever.

Pitchers Booked to Win.

Ray Collins, who has begun to be a big help to the Red Sox family, is counted on for one victory in this set. Larry Pape is expected to win his game, and Joe Wood to do likewise. Collins and Wood are sure starters against Detroit in next week's battle and both will probably be through with their duties toward St. Louis before Tuesday, so they can rest up a bit for the tough arguments to follow.

Heinie Wagner has been clouting so hard that he has been moved up to fourth place in the batting order, and will probably be kept there until the Red Sox have another slump, or until Duffy Lewis is able to pass him. The new order, with Engle second, Wagner fourth, Carrigan fifth and Gardner sixth, worked nicely against Chicago in the final game of the series.

TO PLAY FOR LUMBER TRADE CHAMPIONSHIP

Pope & Cottle, champions of Chelsea, will play with the strong A. T. Stearns team of Neponset for the championship of the wholesale and retail lumber dealers, Saturday, at Neponset playgrounds. On account of the intense rivalry a large crowd is expected.

Pope & Cottle have a few open dates left and would like to hear from the strongest semi-professional teams in the State. Address Pope & Cottle.

BAY VIEW WILL PLAY ROXBURY ATHLETES

A good game is on the card at the M Street playgrounds, South Boston, to-morrow afternoon, when the Bay Views of that district clash with the Roxbury Athletics. These teams are the strongest in the district they represent and a hard fought battle should be the result. Devine and Dickie will do the box work for the Roxbury team and Connolly and McCarthy will be the battery for the peninsular team.

ELKS IN BATTLE FOR BASEBALL TITLE

The Somerville Elks and Malden Elks of the Suburban Elks' Baseball League are now tied for first place, each having won three games and lost none. Saturday's game will be for blood. It was to have been played in Somerville, but will take place on the Malden High School grounds, Saturday afternoon, at 3:30.

PITTSBURG, July 28.—Fred Tenney's Rustlers reached Pittsburg this morning, ready to tackle the Pirates in the first game of a series of four. The men were hoping for better luck than they had in Chicago, where they dropped three straight.

The Pirates took the whole series in Boston recently, but Manager Tenney promised to do better this time. The Rustlers were stumbling blocks for Pittsburg last season and they are about due to exhibit some of their old strength against Fred Clarke's band.

Cecil Ferguson, who appears to have recovered his control, is likely to pitch the opening game here.

It is possible that a trade will be pulled off between the Pirates and the tail-enders. Manager Clarke wants a left-handed pitcher, and Tenney would jump at a chance to get Outfielder Carey or Campbell.

NAT BUTLER IN BIG MOTOR RACE

Nat Butler, the veteran pace follower, expects to have little trouble in winning the one-hour motor pace race at the Revere Cycle Track to-morrow evening. Nat has been training at the beach oval for the past week and says that he is in better shape than he has been since his return from Paris. Opposed to Nat in this event are Ray Duer, Percy Lawrence and Clarence Carman.

Both Butler and Lawrence are anxious to win the event as a win will put them in the running for the gold medal to be given the champion motor pace follower at the close of the season. Elmer Collins has the lead up to date, but as he is not entered in the event to-morrow evening a win for either of the other riders will put them in the running for the medal.

MAY TRADE OFF "DOC" MILLER

President William Hepburn Russell of the Boston Nationals left for Pittsburg today, where he hopes to pull off a deal for Vincent Campbell, giving Doc Miller in exchange.

He expects to see Al Bridwell in action in the Smoky City. It would not surprise Mr. Russell if Gleason also journeyed to Pittsburg, as the new part owner of the Rustlers is anxious to see the team play as soon as possible.

The AMERICAN goes into more homes than all the other evening papers of Boston combined. It is the Quality newspaper.

NEW HORSES IN MATINEE RACES

All that is needed is good weather and track for the amateur horsemen to have a great day of sport tomorrow. The Fellsway Driving Club have thirteen events listed for Combination Park, and among the horses entered are several new to national racing.

Blackstone Cigar Quality is Higher than its Price

Ten cents doesn't seem much to pay for a cigar that is superior in flavor and quality to many higher priced brands. To WAITT & BOND BLACKSTONE smokers the wonder this year is how they can be sold for 10c. It's largely because we are willing to pay the price for the choicest leaf from a short crop, making less profit, and making up the difference in cost when fine tobacco is in abundance.

WAITT & BOND BLACKSTONE CIGAR 10c

is made in Boston of the finest Havana tobacco (grown in the Isle of Cuba) and has a wrapper of genuine Sumatra. The additional cost of duty on foreign-made cigars is eliminated.

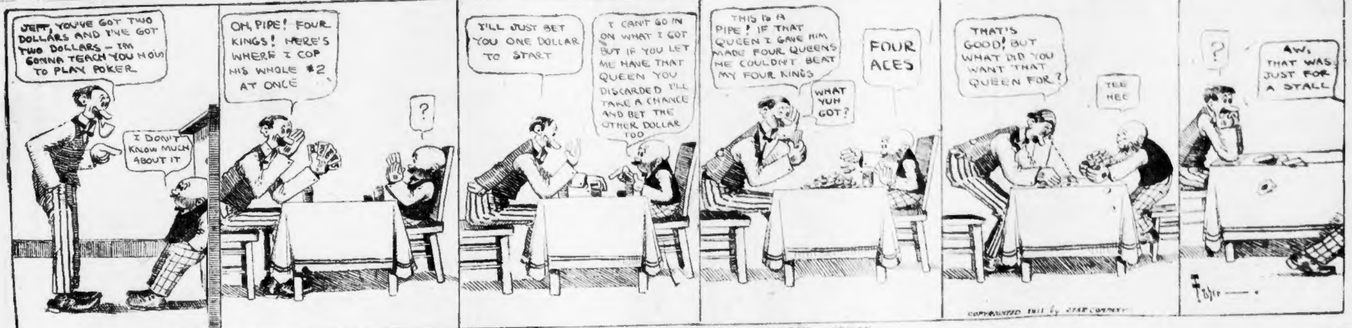
Oh, No, Jeff Doesn't Know a Single Thing About Poker

By "Bud" Fisher



JEFF, YOU'VE GOT TWO DOLLARS AND I'VE GOT TWO DOLLARS — I'M GONNA TEACH YOU HOW TO PLAY POKER
I DON'T KNOW MUCH ABOUT IT
OH, PIPE! FOUR KINGS! HERE'S WHERE I COP HIS WHOLE $2 AT ONCE
I'LL JUST BET YOU ONE DOLLAR TO START
I CAN'T GO IN ON WHAT I GOT BUT IF YOU LET ME HAVE THAT QUEEN YOU DISCARDED I'LL TAKE A CHANCE AND BET THE OTHER DOLLAR TOO
THIS IS A PIPE! IF THAT QUEEN I GAVE HIM MADE FOUR QUEENS HE COULDN'T BEAT MY FOUR KINGS
WHAT YUH GOT?
FOUR ACES
THAT'S GOOD! BUT WHAT DID YOU WANT THAT QUEEN FOR?
TEE HEE
AW, THAT WAS JUST FOR A STALL

ITTLE FELLOWS MAKE UP BOUTS

w that about all of the star heavyts in the country are labeled for enila fight "fans" will have to be fied with battles between the middleghts, lightweights, featherweights and little bantamweights. And there will ome rattling good scraps between the e fellows, too.

st now there is a surplus of good gers outside of the heavyweight divi. This is particularly so in the lightht and middleweight classes, where e promises to be some great doings few months.

mong the lightweights Ad Wolgast is most prominent figure. The Cadillac ser is now planning matches with about y lightweight of importance in the land. first bout will be with little Pal Moore Philadelphia on Labor Day.

wo years ago Pal was considered one of most likely looking youngsters in the ge. At the time it was predicted that would some day be the lightweight mpion of the world. And with reason for the dapper mixer from the city Brotherly Love kept bowling over the k men in the featherweight and lightght divisions with clock-like precision. oo much work, however, appears to e had a disastrous effect on Pal's stitution, and he is now fighting far ow his customary form.

fter he gets through with Moore, Ad booked to meet Packey McFarland in waukee. This affair is all up in the , however, Tom Jones being very much against his charge meeting the stockd favorite under the present conditions. The "Michigan Terror" considers his nces with Moore and McFarland merely training bouts in preparation for his with Freddie Welsh out on the coast. t Ad is liable to get a rude awakening he thinks that he is picking a lemon in her Moore or McFarland. This is particularly so in the case of Packey, who is considered one of the toughest little mixers in the game. The Chicago boy has yet to se a battle in his long career in the roped area.

n the middleweight class there will be challenges and counter challenges from now on. Billy Papke, who is considered the champion, was originally scheduled to meet Sailor Burke in New York on August 8, but the date of the bout has now been put over to August 22. There is a strong probability that the affair will never take place.

Papke has been besieged with challenges ever since he returned to this country. Among the number of "would be" champions are "Cyclone Johnny" Thompson, Frank Klaus, Leo Houck, Hugh Kelly, Willie Lewis, Joe Thomas and several others.

NO POSSIBLE CHANCE FOR DOOIN TO PLAY BALL THIS YEAR

ST. LOUIS, July 28.—Manager Dooin of the Phillies is resting well to-day at the Frisco Hospital, notwithstanding the broken leg he sustained in Wednesday's game. Dr. George W. Cole, chief surgeon, says that Dooin will not be able to leave for at least two weeks, and that it is a foregone conclusion that he cannot return to the game this season.

Dooin said in an interview to-day that inasmuch as President Lynch only administered a fifty-dollar fine on Umpire Klem, Sherwood Magee should be allowed to return to active duty with a proclamation of permanent banishment should similar tactics be indulged in, not only by Magee, but any other member of the National League.

Dooin realizes that his pennant possibilities are now at a low ebb, and unless the Philadelphia club receives better treatment it is all over.

RETURN MAGEE IS FANS' WISH

ST. LOUIS, July 28.—Two hundred St. Louis baseball fans, among them some of the leading bankers and brokers of St. Louis, have sent a wire to President T. J. Lynch of the National League asking him to reinstate Sherwood Magee as a tribute to Manager Dooin, who broke his leg in Wednesday's game.

The condition of his reinstatement is to be that Magee apologize through the American press for his action in striking Umpire Finneran.

FOGEL BUYS CATCHER.

YORK, Pa., July 28.—Carter, a York Tristate club catcher, has been sold to the Philadelphia Nationals to help fill the place of Dooin, who was injured. The consideration is two players and $1,000. Carter is an old Manhattan College player.

ANNUAL CRUISE OF N. Y. CLUB

NEW YORK, July 28.—The annual cruise of the New York Yacht Club will be between August 3 and 12 this year. The official designation of the various legs of the annual cruise and the two chief races of the cruise have been made public in formal sailing instructions as follows:

August 4, from Glen Cove to Morris Cove; August 5, Morris Cove to New London; August 7, New London to Fort Pond Bay; August 8, Fort Pond Bay to New Bedford; August 9, New Bedford to Newport.

Newport will be the rendezvous for the starters in the race for the cup presented by the late King of England and that for the one presented by John Jacob Astor. The former is open to any yacht belonging to any recognized yacht club in the United States, and will start off Brenton Reef lightship at 10:30 a. m., August 11. The various courses mapped out average about thirty-six miles.

The Astor cup race for schooners, sloops, cutters and yawls will start at the same place on August 10, as will the Brenton Reef cup race on August 11 in connection with the King's cup event.

BIG LEAGUE PITCHER WANTS SEMI GAMES

A good right handed pitcher who was with the Jersey City team in the Eastern League up to a few weeks ago but who retired from baseball to enter business would like to get work with some of the best semi-professional teams around Boston for Saturday afternoons. This pitcher was successful with the Eastern Leaguers and only left the game on account of business. He is at work in Boston and has Saturday afternoon to himself and wants to keep in condition. R. P. M., 25 Montrose street, Somerville; telephone 94 W.

BOXING COMMISSION HAVE NOT ACCEPTED

NEW YORK, July 28.—Legalizing of boxing in New York State has struck a snag. Although Governor Dix has appointed three members to the commission which is to regulate the sport, Bartow S. Weeks of this city, one of the commission, has served notice that he will probably be unable to accept while ignorance as to intentions of Major J. J. Dixon and Frank O'Neill of Binghamton, also exists. None of the three has announced acceptance. The new law goes into effect as soon as the commissioners organize.

TIGERS CALL ON PRESIDENT TAFT

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Hughey Jennings, with the entire Tiger team in tow, called on President Taft Thursday.

The President shook hands with each player and with "Wild Bob" Burman, the automobile speed king, who accompanied the team. Manager Jennings did not emit any of his famous "e-yahs" when the President grasped his hand. He simply grinned.

"I want to know why you always hit," demanded the President when he grasped the hand of "Ty" Cobb, the slugging Georgia member of the team.

"Well, sometimes I don't hit," replied the modest Mr. Cobb.

"You don't miss them very often," said the President.

"He'd make a fine umpire," said one member of the team as the players filed out of the President's office.

REFEREE ED SMITH IN SANITARIUM

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28.—Friends of Eddie Smith, the famous pugilistic referee, who is ill of brain fever in an Oakland sanitarium, expressed fear to-day that the attack would prove fatal. Smith has suffered a relapse and is unconscious. No one is allowed to see him.

PIRATES SECURE CATCHER KELLY

ST. PAUL, July 28.—William Kelly, battery mate of Martin O'Toole, the $22,500 pitcher sold to Pittsburg, is also sold to the Pirates.

Although denied by the management of the St. Paul club, this is true. Kelly has been bought by President Barney Dreyfuss for [illegible] and a catcher worth $2500 in exchange. It is said that announcement of the sale of Kelly has not been made because the St. Paul and Pittsburg owners have not decided upon the backstop to come to St. Paul in exchange.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

NO HARM IN IT

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am nineteen and have known a young man, two years my senior, for the past four years.

When he moved from my town he wrote quite frequently, and last Christmas we exchanged presents.

I do not see him very often, but I know by the way he acts and writes that he cares for me far more than I do for him.

While I value his friendship I do not believe I could care for him more than as a friend.

Will you kindly tell me if I am doing wrong to write to him and have him call occasionally and exchange presents?

I do not wish to drop his friendship, but I am afraid he has more than a friendly feeling toward me. I. F.

IF you are careful always to act merely in the friendliest way with this young man he should soon see that your feeling for him goes no further than simple friendship. In case he does not realize this, it is his own fault and he must bear the consequences. Certainly you may write to him, only be careful not to do so too frequently or to say anything in your letters which could be misinterpreted. At Christmas it would be best, I think, not to give him a present, but if you very much wish to do so let it be a simple gift made by yourself and of no especial intrinsic value.

CAN TRUST HIM

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young school girl, and about a month ago met a school chap of twenty.

His worst habit is teasing every girl he meets, and asking them for their pictures. He claims he is NOT teasing me. This he proves in many ways.

To every one of his promises he is loyal. He is also very refined and respectful.

Do you think it is necessary to put him to any futher test? I believe he's sincere. G. E. B.

FROM what you say I am convinced you can trust this man with your happiness.

It lies with you to gradually break him of a habit which means to be no more than an expression of youthful spirits.

Day's Best Story

Both boys had been rude to their mother. She put them to bed earlier than usual, and then complained to their father about them. So he started up the stairway, and they heard him coming.

"Here comes papa," said Will. "I'h going to make believe I'm asleep."

"I'm not," said Freddy. "I'm going to get up and put something on."

ITCHING PILES CURED

Man Cured in a Few Days

Carrollton, Ky., harbors a man who cannot speak too highly or too often about the wonderful benefits he received from Resinol. His name is W. W. Evans. Read what he says:

"I can scarcely thank you sufficiently for the great blessing you have conferred upon me. I was suffering agony from itching piles, when advised to use Resinol Soap and warm water, and apply Resinol Ointment. In a few days I was entirely cured. I feel under many obligations to you, and shall take great pleasure in telling others of these excellent preparations."

Resinol Ointment is the recognized specific remedy for every kind of skin irritation and inflammation, including eczema, tetter, shingles, milk-crust, dandruff, psoriasis, burns, scalds, eruptions of poison ivy, boils, carbuncles, felons, sores and cuts. It cannot harm the most delicate skin. It is absolutely non-irritant. It does not contain a particle of poison or anything which is not absolutely safe to use under all conditions. Resinol Ointment is put up in screw-top opal containers, selling at fifty cents and a dollar, according to size. Resinol Soap is recognized by physicians, nurses and the people generally as one of the finest, purest, most soothing and refreshing toilet and bath soaps possible of production. Its antiseptic medication is the best preventative of skin infection. It keeps the skin in health and preserves the complexion. There is nothing quite so good for shampooing and the cleansing of the scalp or for the prevention of dandruff and falling out of hair. Physicians particularly recommend it for baby's bath. It keeps the body free from many of the troubles incident to childhood. The ointment and soap are sold by all druggists. Resinol Chemical Co., Baltimore, Md.

Synopsis of Preceding Instalments

SIR IAN and Lady Hereward, while visiting their neighbor, Mrs. Forestier, learn accidentally of the presence in England of Teresina Ricardo, a beautiful young girl, with whom Sir Ian was infatuated while in India, prior to his marriage.

"She has decided to pay you a surprise visit, this very day," says Mrs. Forestier.

Sir Ian and his wife hasten home to receive Miss Ricardo, but Lady Hereward leaves him when half through the woods to Friar's Moat, explaining that she has some souvenirs to distribute among several of her tenants.

Sir Ian meets Miss Ricardo, whom he has not seen for years. She notices that he seems distressed. She explains that she is visiting her cousin's wife a few miles away, and felt compelled to visit Sir Ian and his wife, who had been her companions in former years.

Mrs. Barnard, wife of Tom Barnard, farmkeeper for the Herewards, is attending to her household duties with little Poppet, six years old, playing at her knee, when Miss Craigie, Lady Hereward's maid, calls to make a visit at the Barnard lodge. Tom Barnard, who was a soldier under Colonel Hereward and idolizes his old chieftain, is always at the village. The Barnards live under the shadow of an old stone tower, which was built to afford the countryside a wonderful view of the hills in the distance.

Mrs. Barnard tells Miss Craigie the history of Ian Barr. The old uncle of Sir Ian Hereward married an Italian opera singer. They separated, and then, without learning whether his first wife was alive or not, old Sir Ian married an Irish peasant girl. Ian Barr was born to them, the boy taking the name of Barr when he learned that his father's first wife was alive. Ian Barr quarreled with old Sir Ian when he (Ian Barr) learned of his father's deception, and was cut off in the will, everything being left to Ian Hereward, a nephew, when the old man died. Sir Ian tried to get Ian Barr to accept the fortune, but the latter refused and was subsequently persuaded to take the place of steward on the estate.

Miss Craigie goes, and shortly afterward Sir Ian appears and asks for Tom. His face is white, and he cries that his wife has been killed. When Tom comes home, they go to the tower, where the former had found the body of his wife. Her jewelry is missing and it looks like robbery and murder.

Miss Ricardo is summoned to the inquest, where Sir Ian is the first witness. He tells of starting with his wife to walk home from Mrs. Forestier's. He says he left her at the Tower, at her express wish, and went the rest of the way alone. He also tells of finding Miss Ricardo at his home. He says that his wife knew Miss Ricardo years before and that he had met her in India.

He tells of going to seek his wife and finding her body. He had met no one on the way and he suspects no one of having had a grudge against Lady Hereward. In response to a query by the coroner, he declares that he and his wife were always on the best of terms.

Kate Craigie, called to the stand, says she thinks her ladyship was more in love with Sir Ian than he was with her.

TO-DAY'S INSTALMENT

NEXT after Kate came Teresina Ricardo. Thus far, the witnesses had followed each other in order, according to the bearing of their evidence upon the case. Sir Ian's testimony had naturally been taken first, since he had been in his wife's company for some hours before the murder, and had left her in the woods, close to the Tower where she met her death.

Rose Barnard and Kate Craigie had together heard the shots; one of which, in all probability, had killed Lady Hereward. Miss Ricardo, it had been ascertained, was one of the first persons who saw Sir Ian after his return through the woods, where he had parted with his wife, therefore her testimony fitted in at this point which had been reached.

If Terry had needed a warning, Kate's experience in the hands of the coroner would have given it. "Nothing can be asked of me that wasn't asked by that policeman yesterday," she tried to be sure, yet she called upon her soul to stand firm.

As she rose to go to the witness's chair where Sir Ian had sat, and Mrs. Barnard and Kate Craigie, the door was opened by the guardian policeman outside. A visiting card with something written on it with pencil was passed in, and up to the coroner. A whispered discussion followed among the officials assembled at the table, and presently an answer went back to the door.

Some one was admitted, and the questioning of Miss Ricardo was delayed until the slight disturbance should be over. Terry did not turn her head to look at the door. She stood, ready to go to the coroner's table when she should be wanted, but that would not be quite yet, for the coroner's clerk had got up, and was talking to the person who had come in.

Then the clerk returned and spoke to the coroner, handing a piece of paper, which might have been a leaf torn from a note-book. There was a little more conferring, and Miss Ricardo was requested to take her place in the chair by the coroner.

As she obeyed she saw the face of the newcomer, who had been given a seat. He was looking at her, and their eyes met. His were of yellowish brown, like the thin hair and stubby mustache, which was turning gray—a dirty, unattractive gray. His complexion was yellow too, and there were baggy wrinkles under the cold eyes.

"Alligator eyes!" Terry said to herself, as she had said before of the same eyes. It was many years since she had seen the man, but she knew him at once, for he had changed little. He was one of those persons whom it is impossible to imagine as ever having been much younger, or as ever growing much older.

It was Major Smedley, the man at whom Terry had cried out as "the worst old gossip and tabby-cat that ever lived," when Maud had mentioned his name, just before news of the murder came to White Fields. The armour of strength which she had girded on seemed to loosen at the joints.

She was afraid of Major Smedley.

Met in India

Terry's examination by the coroner began exactly as she had reason to expect that it would begin. But by and by fell the blow she had been dreading since she had recognized Major Smedley.

It fell in the form of a question, following upon one which concerned her early acquaintance with Lady Hereward, then Miss Millicent Latham.

"Did Miss Latham introduce Captain Hereward to you?"

"No," said Terry. "But the first time I ever met him I happened to find out that he was a very distant cousin of my friend Miss Latham."

"Did you correspond with her about him?"

"I wrote that I had met a cousin of hers whom she hadn't seen since they were children."

"How long did your acquaintance with Captain Hereward last before he left India?"

"Only a few weeks."

"Is it true that Captain Hereward wished to marry you?"

Now Terry could guess very well what had been written on that bit of paper which the coroner had read and discussed with the chief constable and the detective-inspector from Scotland Yard. She had known, the moment she saw Mayor Smedley, what would happen.

"How like him," she thought, "to come here and mix himself up in this awful business, just because of the prominence it will give him in his clubs! He has volunteered to come and bear witness and he has put them up to ask me things that without some horrid hint from him wouldn't even have seemed of importance."

Ceased to Be Afraid

Suddenly, in her disgustful anger against the man, she ceased to be afraid. She knew that when Major Smedley had a grudge against people he made a boast of "paying them out," if it took half his life; and he had had a grudge against her for thirteen years.

She had been a very popular girl in Indian society, and had snubbed him with all the frankness of youth when he tried to be "nice to her." Many women would have liked to do the same, but did not dare. He knew too much about them, and to have a weapon was to use it, with Major Smedley.

But there was nothing which a girl of eighteen need fear to have known about herself; and hating the character of a malicious male gossip more than most others, she had taken some pleasure in being disagreeable to the "horrid old tabby."

Ian had snubbed him, too; for Captain Hereward had little more to hide from the world in those days than had Miss Teresina Ricardo, the debutante; and even if he had secrets to keep, he was not the sort of man to keep them at the price of a cowardly civility to a person he detested.

Now after all these years, evidently, it had seemed to Major Smedley that his time had come at last to scratch in good earnest. Nothing on earth would delight such a creature more than a chance to throw suspicion on Sir Ian Hereward through Miss Ricardo.

But Miss Ricardo determined that he should not succeed. She would not let Ian be hurt through her. No matter what she might have to say, she would not hurt Ian.

The calmness that blew like a cooling breeze upon the heat of her excitement was strange to Terry, but she was thankful for it.

After a scarcely perceptible pause, she said in response to the corner's question: "I do not think that Captain Hereward ever wished to marry me." And almost she would have been glad if Ian had been there to hear her answer.

"Within three months after our first meeting," she went on, without waiting for another question to come, "he had fallen desperately in love with my friend Miss Latham, and was engaged to her."

Washable Handbags

THE fashion for handbags never lets up. The shops offer an infinite variety that never seems to stale. Patent leather gave way to velvet, velvet found a rival in suede, suede in turn gave place to ribbed silk and brocade, and now we have washable bags to carry with linen suits. The idea is good.

One can buy these bags or make them. They come in linen, which is boldly soutached, and in real and imitation Irish lace mounted over linen, but one of the exclusive kind is built of the old-fashioned cord macrame, which is returned to favor as a trimming for gowns.

It is nothing but coarse lattice work made of linen cord, which you can buy in the shops, put over a bag of plain linen and either mounted on a metal frame or stiffened like an envelope flap and folded over to fasten with a button.

If one likes this stiff kind of a bag the effect can be gained through crinoline. It is put between the linen and an inside facing or lining. Its only disadvantage is that it does not wash well, and one must have the bag cleaned instead of scrubbing it.

Cords for Belts

THE cordeliere that was brought out on house gowns last Summer is now widely taken up for all manner of frocks. It is only suitable for those made with the high-waist line. The newest interpretation of it is a series of heavy cords covered with silk or satin, placed close together, and finished at the side of the front with irregular ends. These are made of the cords, or of satin, and they invariably have a heavy tassel on the end.

One of the new evening gowns for a fashionable woman has cords of silver around the white satin gown at an Empire waist line, finished with tassels of brilliants.

Massage for Temper

MASSAGE has for some years been the fashionable woman's friend. It has in turn relieved her of nerves, a too abundant figure, given her a good circulation, and aided her digestion, and, altogether, put her on her feet when she was run down, and on edge from the demands of life.

But massage is now being used in other ways and for other purposes. It bids fair to supplant entirely the old-fashioned method of chastisement for children. If your child turns sulky or flies into a tantrum, making life hideous with its temper, you no longer punish it in the old-fashioned, satisfying, if ineffective, manner. Instead you send for a masseuse, and have it massaged for the "sulks."

The latest treatment for naughty children is to look upon their naughtiness as purely a physical disorder, the seat of which is the stomach. The mother or nurses should treat the child as a patient.

The stomach should be well massaged, and after being kept quiet for an hour or two the naughty child will emerge radiantly happy, serene, and amenable. The Japanese, who are the masters of self-control, have long used this treatment for children in a temper. In Japan all naughtiness in children is supposed to proceed from a disordered stomach, and is treated accordingly.

NOW, YOU BUNK HERO, THIS HEAD ON COLLISION WILL DESTROY YOUR HANDSOME BROW. LOTS OF SPEED!
OH, MY HAT PINS!
HERSHFIELD

Tied fast between two big barrels containing gunpowder, Desperate Desmond is rolling down hill to his death. Before he strikes the bottom of the hill, the fuse will explode the powder and the black career of the villain will be ended. And there are no consoling memories to soothe his last moments. His deeds have all been evil.

A snake is emerging from its lair as the barrels roll down the mountain side. A snake is the symbol of all that is heartless and treacherous, but Desmond is its equal in both respects, and he adds to his wickedness human intelligence to direct his fell designs. The snake knows no better; Desmond does.

Infuriated by the approach of the bounding barrels, the snake, which proves to be a large boa constrictor, seizes one in its terrible coils. Human beings might learn a lesson from the boa constrictor in one way. Whatever it takes up, it takes up with all its might. In this case it crushes the barrel into disjointed staves.

The fall of Desmond is arrested, and the lovers see that their plan to rid the world of a scoundrel is baffled. No matter how certain a thing may appear, one should not rely absolutely upon it. Nothing is certain except that which has happened. Even death and taxes may be temporarily avoided.

In a few moments the situation is entirely reversed. Desmond and his Wild Men surround Claude and Rosamond, who are again at the mercy of their foes. It is vain for them to attempt to escape, for the Wild Men know the country too well. About the only advanage a Wild Man has is his knowledge of woodcraft.

"I'm the boy!" cries Desperate Desmond, as he prepares to make Rosamond the means of ending her lover's life. As she slides down the wire the pins in her hat—which she has worn out of season, owing to the lack of milliners in the Borneo forest—must pierce Claude's skull. See to-morrow's pictures.

Turning the Tables

How the Tough Young Man Got Even

By KENNETT HARRIS

THE bulky young man with the plaster-decorated countenance chuckled hoarsely, but heartily, much to the bridge-tender's surprise. "This here's one of them cases where everybody's satisfied and no kicks coming or going," he said in explanation.

"But he beat you up," urged the bridge-tender.

The bulky young man gurgled and almost choked. "Sure," he answered, with a grin that had nothing of shame in it. "He beat me up good. Say, I was in bed all of next day and I had to walk with a cane when I got up. It's a wonder he didn't kill me."

"For the love of Mike!" ejaculated the bridge-tender. "Him! Was you woozy?"

"Me? Why, no," replied the bulky young man. "I was as sober as I am this minute. Ain't he the little scrapper, though? You wouldn't think it of him just to look at him, would you?"

"I wouldn't," said the bridge-tender, decidedly.

"No more muscle than a grasshopper, you'd suppose," pursued the bulky young man, caressing one of the cross strips of plaster on his face. "Seven inches across the chest, if you'd ask me. I'll bet he wouldn't weigh ninety-five stripped. But he's a whirlwind all right, all right. They tell me there isn't standing room in the drug store since it happened. I guess the boss will have to raise him to fifteen per."

"You must have been doped," said the bridge-tender. "I hear you didn't land one wallop."

He Admits It

"That's no lie. I didn't," the bulky young man admitted cheerfully. "It was his fight from the tap of the gong." He sucked a skinned knuckle and looked at it reflectively.

"How did you get that, then?" demanded the bridge-tender, noting the action.

"I done that this noon on a guy that got funny and wanted to buy me a chocolate sundae," replied the bulky young man.

The bridge-tender raised his cap and scratched his head. "What's the answer, Joe?" he asked.

The bulky young man hoisted himself with surprising lightness and agility to the bridge rail and locked a foot in the lower iron work.

"I've got to get it off my chest to somebody, and it might as well be you," he said. "It's on the dead, though. If you get leaky, I'll tie you in a double knot and dump you in the drink—see? Well, me and Gert was doing fine until this little mutt come along and edged in. The joke of it was, I took her around to the joint where he works myself and I seen trouble a-coming right then. I don't know whether it was that baby-blue tie he was wearing or his white jacket or his sunny smile, but I seen Gert was sort of struck with him, and you know what a looker she is. Maybe she flagged him; I don't know. Anyway, I give him the bad eye and he was good for that while.

"From that evening, there was frost in the air, and after a while, a guy puts me hep. Gert was getting the strawberry ice and orange phosphate habit something fierce, and it was giving her sick headaches, when she had a date with me every once in a while. Well, first off, I puts it up to her. 'I cut out everything that goes before the chaser to please you, little one,' I says to her. 'Now it's up to you to take treatment for the pineapple sherbet curse and the demon sarsaparilla,' says I. 'You put yourself in the hands of old Dr. Joe, kid,' I says. 'All others is imitations and fakes.'

"'Is that so-o?' says she. And that was about all the satisfaction I got.

Notifies Willie

"Then I went to Willie and says to him: 'That lady and me is keeping company, my young Christian friend,' I says. 'I don't want specially to push that dinky little mustache of yours through to the nape of your neck to make you understand it, but I'm subject to brainstorms and the hurricane season is coming on.'

"Well, he turned the color of a milkshake and said he didn't want no trouble; so I went off feeling easy in my mind, being young and inexperienced; but I found out later that Gert had a few brief words to say on the subject because of her saying them. It seems that I didn't have no strings on her, and that she was going to go with any gent she pleased, and that if I started anything the stuff was all off, and there was other things besides scrapping in the world, and a great husky like me ought to be ashamed to talk about beating up a gentleman that was too much of a gentleman to lower himself fist fighting, and that she was going to a show with him that very night, and what was I going to do about it?

"That was the question I had to study over. What I done about it was to lay for them at the corner of the street. I didn't know whether Willie would have the sand to take her after what I'd said, but when I thought of a queen like Gert ribbing him up, I wasn't so sure. Anyway, it was up to me, so I gave Clancy the tip to get to the lower end of his beat when I whistled. It's Clancy's beat there and it was all right with him. I told him I wouldn't make it no ambulance case.

"Pretty soon here they come, and I didn't waste no time talking. I swung a corker in the general direction of his jaw, and if it had landed I wouldn't be so sure about that ambulance. But I missed him."

"How?" said the bridge-tender incredulously.

"Just missed him," grinned the bulky young man. "And then I missed him again. I missed seven times hand-running, and then that spiteful, blood-thirsty little devil hit back and I went over. Now what do you know about that! And I nearly went over that time, and when I led for his jaw I fell short and he caught me another clip that knocked me down. He had a bunch of phoney rings on his fingers, too, and they cut me and started the ruddy gore. Gee! it was fierce. And every time I'd fall short or miss and every time he'd land. I heard Gert telling him to quit, but he was warmed up proper, and when she ketched hold of him, he'd break loose and clout me a few more. Finally I lay down and took the count with my eyes shut, and what do you think happened?"

Just Like a Woman

"Search me," replied the bridge-tender.

"Gert got down on her knees and begun to cry over me and wipe my face with her handkerchief. Then she turned loose on Willie and what she didn't say to him was too harmless and pleasant to be worth while. He took a sneak and Clancy came up, and with a little more help they got me home. Say, I was limp! The limpest you ever seen. Just think of that brutal little villain treating me like that!"

"You're a peach!" said the bridge-tender.

COULD NOT SLEEP WITH ITCHING RASH

All Over Baby's Body, Head and Face. Scratching Made Sores. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment and Have Had No Further Trouble.

"On July 27, 1909, we left Boston for a trip to England and Ireland, taking baby with us. After being in Ireland a few days a nasty rash came out all over his body. We took him to a doctor who said it was chicken pox, and gave us medicine for him. The trouble started in the form of a rash and was all over baby's body, head and face, at different times. It irritated, and he would scratch it with all his might. The consequence was it developed into sores, and we were afraid it would leave nasty scars on his face. "When we reached England we took baby to another doctor, who said his condition was due to change of food and climate, and gave more medicine. The rash got no better, and it used to itch and burn at night so bad that the child could not sleep. He was completely covered with it at different times. It was at this time that my mother advised us to try Cuticura Soap and Ointment. After using Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment for about nine months the places disappeared. There are not any scars, or other kind of disfigurement, and baby is completely cured by the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. We have had no further trouble with baby's skin. Nothing stopped the itching, and allowed baby to sleep but Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment." (Signed) Mrs. Margaret Gunn, 29 Burrell St., Roxbury, Boston, Mass., March 12, 1911.

The Gun Runner

A Thrilling Story of Wireless and War

Synopsis of Preceding Instalments

GUSTAV LINGG, wireless operator on the steamer Laminian, goes ashore for a stroll while his ship is loading at her dock in New York and becomes lost when a dense fog sweeps up from the bay. On a side street he meets a beautiful young woman, whom he has never seen before, and who calls him by name. "I want to talk with you," she says, "I must talk with you—alone."

Lingg, abashed, stares at her boobishly for a moment and then turns and flees. He goes a long way and finally, just as a ferry whistle tells him that he is nearing the river, he enters a narrow street, only to find his way blocked by a cab, a cab with an open door.

In the cab sits the woman from whom he had fled. "I wanted to warn you," she says, and makes him enter the cab.

"Of what?" he asks, as the cab starts.

"Not to sail on the Laminian."

He asks why not and she replies that it will not be safe. He apparently doubts her and she pleads with him. Finally she asks him to kiss her, and as he draws away from her, throws her arms around his neck. In the midst of his struggles the door of the cab opens and a man drags him into the street. A crowd gathers and a policeman appears, who begins clubbing his assailant. Then another man appears, who flings off the policeman and puts the dazed operator back into the cab, calling out to the driver:

"To the police station, straight!"

The man who had attacked the operator then tells the bewildered policeman that the man who has just driven off in the cab with Lingg is one of Wilkie's men and that the woman is also in the secret service.

The scene changes to the deck of the steamship Laminian. A big-shouldered man in a raincoat wants to send a message, but the operator tells him the wireless apparatus is out of order and that he can't do any sending until he fixes it.

The captain calls to the operator to hurry up and get his apparatus in shape. Through the mist can be seen an approaching warship. The man in the raincoat paces the deck, now and then stopping to glance in at the wireless apparatus. He finally files a couple of messages with the operator, signing them Michael Duffy.

The next day the man hangs around the wireless cabin again, after asking if there have been any replies to his message. The operator explains to him the workings of the wireless system and the stranger says he wants to send a message to New Orleans to inquire when a shipment of oil and mill shafting left that port.

The stranger inquires about the warship and the operator says she is bound for Culebra, off Porto Rico, having been ordered south on account of the Colombian trouble.

"Ever made this trip before?" asks the stranger.

"Never on this tub," is McKinnon's response.

McKinnon confides in the stranger that he is working on an invention, but that models cost money and he has to go slow.

After beating around the bush for a while, the stranger finally asks McKinnon if he would like to make a good, round sum by helping him out of a hole. He says that he represents the Consolidated Fruit Concern, which has big interests in Locombia, where a revolution threatens. He says also that Ganley, the famous gun runner and fomenter of revolutions, is on the ship. He wants the operator to hold up any message which may come for this man Ganley, who, he says, is booked under the name of Siebert, until he has had a chance to see them. He asks if he couldn't accidently miss a message, or send one out without being sure that it would carry clear across to the next operator. He offers him a thousand dollars to do as he asks and gives him three twenties to bind the bargain.

After the man has bid him good night, there is a knock at the door and in response to the operator's call to "come in," a young woman enters. She asks him if he is still sending.

McKINNON was keenly conscious of her presence there so close beside him. There was something perversely and insidiously exhilarating in it. It made him forget the hour and the fact that he was bone-tired. The orderly-like stewardess fluttering about, he supposed somewhere beyond the closed door, alone took the romance out of a visit so deliberately secret.

He turned to his key again, and again called through the night. Then he adjusted his 'phones and listened. He finally put down his "set," with a shake of the head.

"I'm afraid we'll have to wait until morning," he said.

"I'm sorry," she answered, with her studious eyes on the dancing-girl lithograph above the faded wall-map.

"If you'll leave the message, I'll file it," McKinnon explained, to hide his resentment at the half-derisive touch that had crept into her glance.

The woman handed him the message form, with her intent eyes now on his.

"Must I pay now?" she asked.

"It will be charged against your stateroom; the purser will collect it before you land," explained the operator as he jabebd the message on his send-book with a businesslike sweep of hand.

"But you will see that it's sent!" she asked as she rose to her feet.

"It will eb off before you're up," McKinnon answered, watching her as she drew the heavy folds of her veil close down over her face. She looked aback, at the door, with a timidly audacious nod of the head. The next moment the door closed and she was gone.

Swing About to Table

McKinnon, still conscious of the subtle fragrance that filled the room, swung about to his table. He paused only a second to wonder a little at this faint but persistent perfume that seemed to have charged and changed the very atmosphere about him.

Then he crossed the cabin and reached up and ripped a brightly colored lithograph from the wall, bisecting the terpsichorean figure with one impatient tear of the paper.

He stood in the middle of the room for a moment or two without moving. Then he crossed to his table, reached out to the send-book, and quickly unspeared the message.

He looked at it for several moments. Then he passed his hands over his tired eyes and reread the words. They were addressed to Enrique Luis Carbo, Locombian Consulate, New Orleans, and they said:

Am on board Laminian, bound from New York to Puerto Locombia. Advise necessary quarters.

ALICIA BOYNTON.

McKinnon was still peering down at the message in his hand when he was startled by the sound of someone at his door. Even before he could restore the message to the hook his door was opened and as quickly closed again.

It was the girl who had just left him. He noticed that she held one hand on her breast and that she was panting. She leaned against the jamb for a minute or two, as though weak from fright.

"What is it?" the operator asked.

"Oh, it's nothing," she faltered, struggling bravely enough to regain her composure. Her answer was not altogether convincing.

"What has happened?" persisted the startled operator.

"He Frightened Me"

She moved away from the door, in a listening attitude.

"It was a man" she tried to explain, inadequately. "He frightened me."

"But what man?"

"A stranger—somebody outside."

"You mean that he dared to speak to you?"

There was a moment's silence.

"No," she answered in her low voice. "But it was the shock of seeing him so—so unexpectedly."

McKinnon stepped across the cabin and stood near her. His efforts to catch some clearer glimpse of the veiled face were fruitless. She reminded him of a ruffled bird.

"Won't you sit down until you feel better?"

"No, no! I must go! It's so late! I must go!"

But she still hesitated.

"Shall I take you to your cabin?" he ventured.

She showed actual alarm at this.

"Oh, no; that is out of the question. But if you will turn down your lights until I have slipped away—"

He snapped out the electrics. He could hear her in the darkness quietly opening the door. She stood there looking out for several moments. "Good-night," she whispered gratefully as she slipped across the deck and was gone.

McKinnon stood looking after her, deep in thought.

It was early the next morning that the Laminian ran into a coastwise gale that left her decks clear of passengers and her funnels white with salt. The intermittent crackle of "static" from the humming aerials kept obliterating the etheric "splash" of the Laminian's low powered coils.

The ship was left inarticulate and alone on her course. Beyond the erratic "sneeze" and "cough" of the atmospheric electricity there was no answering voice within McKinnon's sternly delimited radius of communication.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE

Lysander John Takes His Fair Daughter to Task.

IF an unmarried man complains to his girl of the hot weather, she makes him an iced lemonade, but let him complain after he has married and she will tell him he ought to be thankful he hasn't a corset on.

Lysander John Appleton, being among those unfortunate ones who are married, gets the corset kind of sympathy, and so far as any relieving results are concerned, it is the same as if he had not spoken.

He has been complaining frequently of late of the exaggeration of young womanhood as developed by his daughter, Daysey Mayme.

She began with a dab of talcum powder on the tip of her nose "to take off the shine," and the dab of powder grew in thickness and space till it covered her face, giving her the complexion of a circus clown.

Losing all fear of cosmetics with this familiar handling, she began to add a little pink to her cheeks, which grew into a feverish red, making her face look like a piece of red and white peppermint candy.

She then added black to her eyebrows and under her eyes, and the next downward step was easy. She "touched up" her hair. From a modest looking girl she has grown to look like a painted woman, and her natural charms, tired of being concealed under powder and paint, have fled.

"Reformers," said Lysander John, in one of the rare opportunities when he dared to speak, "are always warning a young man of the evils of drink. He must beware of the little drink to-day, they say, because of the bigger drink he may take to-morrow.

"A lot of young women like you, Daysey Mayme, need the attention of the reformers as badly as your brothers. You don't know when you put a dab of talcum on the ends of your noses, 'to take off the shine,' where you are going to stop."

Growing bolder with the sound of his voice, he attacked his daughter's low shoes and short skirts, and dropped from clothes to what women consider "accomplishments."

"You have spent money on music that I couldn't afford, and can't play with the expression of a street piano, and when you sing in a quartette your voice is such that you make three enemies for life. And as for your painting—!"

Words failed when he thought of her last effort, an idealized picture of her mother with a halo on her head.

"Whatever did you mean," he gasped, "painting your mother to look as if she had stuck her head through a pie?"

DRAKE'S CAKE

The Joke

By LAURA SIMMONS

NOW, it came time for a certain rich woman to die. Patiently, obsequiously, did the famous lawyer take down her last will and testament, for she was very rich, very distinguished and very ill.

"A million more for the college; half a million for the new laboratory," dictated the dying woman, feebly. "My name to be over the entrance—there will be no mistake?" "None, madam."

"Fifty thousand apiece to the cousins; how they hate me!" she sighed. "But I have kept them waiting; I only wish I might have held out longer," and the aged millionairess smiled a dreadful, twisted, tired smile. "How glad they'll be to-morrow—even the servants!" For the poor, fierce old lady, slipping out into the Unknown, lonely, bitter and defiant, found in all the world only the scorn, scepticism and selfish pride she had brought into it.

"And now," she muttered, "perhaps I may be permitted to die in peace!"

"One moment, madam. A little matter—a few thousand left to adjust—merely a fraction." The great man spoke hurriedly, as he perceived that the end was not far away.

"Begone, sir!" Her threadlike voice was shrill with anger and the mortal weariness of body and soul.

Wanted One to Care

"Is this a jest—that you trouble a dying woman with a few scattering thousands? Do what you will, only get rid of it, and begone!"

"Let me see; there's a struggling little artist in our block," mused the perplexed lawyer, "and there's no time left now. An absurd sum, anyway—a joke, indeed!" He wrote something hurriedly.

And when he departed the old lady turned her face to the wall and spoke so faintly that only her Maker and the echoes of the vast, magnificent, silent room might have heard that last lonely, heartbreaking appeal.

"I wish," she whimpered, "that there was some one—just one—who was sorry! Some one who cared!—who would weep a little! Some one who would mourn! But now—oh, God! It is too late"—and the poor, rich, old lady passed swiftly into the shadows of the unseen.

Tears of Gratitude

And now the will of the deceased was read, and the numerous beneficiaries rejoiced that they could at last come into their own. The already wealthy institutions seized their shares with politely veiled impatience and passed hollow resolutions of sorrow for the testatrix. The relatives grumbled that she had been so long in passing—and quarreled among themselves over the bequests. The servants ridiculed her affectations and her penuriousness while they hastened to invest their snug fortunes. None gave a single grateful thought to the woman who had befriended them.

But in the chilly little hall room in the heart of the big city the young girl artist sat footsore and heartsick, surrounded by her wonderful, delicate drawings. Why was Art so long, so haunting and despairful—the struggle for food and shelter so sharp and insistent? Yet her brave young eyes still shone with a tragic courage as she looked out over the great, rushing, relentless world that denied her and starved her and would have none of her genius and exquisite dreams.

Mechanically she read the great lawyer's letter. She was faint from hunger and fatigue, and the figures danced queerly before her aching eyes. Over and again she perused the lines, until at last, vaguely comprehending, she sank limply against the dim old couch with a little choking, incredulous sob, and the floodgates of her soul were swept away in a torrent of blessed, healing, ecstatic tears.

On the floor beside her a cheap photograph of the dreadful old lady stared up at her from a newspaper, and the poor little artist seized it and covered it with tears of passionate gratitude and thanksgiving.

The Wooden Kind

HE sighed, and then she sighed, and then they sat down side by side on the golden beach.

She told him of the society season—so boring!—and of the goings-on of her friend Lady Gladys Glittering (whose housemaid she was).

He told her of the races—don'tcher know—and of the horses of his boon companion Sir Also Ran (whose groom he was).

"And have you any horses?" she asked.

He gave a haughty haw-haw.

"By Jove, yes; I am very well known in the racin' circle!" he boasted. "Got a fine stud, yes, by Jove!"

"A stud? Indeed!" she answered, with her eyes fixed dreamily on the horizon. "Was it given away with the collar?"

FRECKLES

New Drug That Quickly Removes These Homely Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as a new drug, othine—double strength, has been discovered that is a positive cure for these homely spots.

Simply get one ounce of othine—double strength, from Houghton & Dutton or Riker-Jaynes Drug Co., and apply a little of it at night, and in the morning you will see that even the worst have begun to disappear, while the light freckles have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than an ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful, clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double-strength othine, as this is sold under the guarantee of money back if it fails to remove the freckles.

TO-DAY'S STOCK MARKETS; FINANCIAL NEWS

STOCK MARKET OPENING FIRM

NEW YORK, July 28.—Traders who had taken advantage of the Moroccan situation and other unfavorable news having sold out, the stock market opened with unexpected strength to-day, with the railroad group leading in an upturn which recorded gains ranging from fractions to almost two points. Industrials and special stocks, following the lead of the railroads, made gains in the first sales, showing great firmness.

The improvement in the market was pronounced, one potential factor being that the sale of more than 75,000 shares yesterday by foreign holders had created a short interest in some departments. The fact that Wall Street had absorbed all the offerings, and that the market opened to-day ready to receive all stocks thrown upon it, helped to advance quotations.

Canadian Pacific showed the most gain in railroads, opening with an initial advance of 1⅜, which in a large measure was due to reciprocity developments at Ottawa.

Among the other gains in the first sales were: Steel ⅜, American Smelting ½, Erie ½, Reading ⅜, Baltimore & Ohio ½, Missouri Pacific ½, Union Pacific ⅜, Southern Pacific ⅜. Atchison, in which there has been heavy dealing lately, was unchanged. The Curb market opened dull.

The London market was still nervous from the Moroccan affair. Americans held steady upon support from America, but many international shares and consols were weak.

Notes for Investors

Aside from the European selling, the liquidation is not worth considering.

One way or another the Moroccan affair came in for a lot of discussion, largely by men who did not seem to be exactly clear whether Morocco was a country or a fancy leather.

Inquiry in high places failed to discover any weakening of confidence on the part of American bankers. They expressed pleasure over being able to buy stocks at the low prices recorded on the tape. Since such a small thing had so much effect, the Morocco incident is useful in showing, by comparison, how utterly the Stanley congressional committee has failed in its attempt to frighten investors with the steel investigation.

Owing to the very large cotton crop this year, international bankers are much concerned over the prospect of getting less money from Europe for cotton than last year, even though Europe may get this year 2,000,000 bales more than it did then. This will weaken the international trade balance, whereas the higher price of grain, due to the smaller crops, will weaken the trade position at home. This situation is causing some of the liquidation of stocks.

Plans are under way for the merger into a single corporation of the companies making up the New York Central system and for the unification of the financing of the New York Central lines. Much work remains to be done, but the management and the company's bankers are now actively engaged in the task and are counting on a successful solution of all the problems involved. This is by far the most extensive readjustment of railroad capitalization ever undertaken. When completed, it will place the finances of the New York Central system in a greatly improved position, for they will be much simplified, and the earnings of this vast system of railways, now collected by many separate corporations, will flow into the treasury of a single corporation with a unified bond issue, so planned as to provide for the future requirements of the property for a long time to come.

For the protection of interests of the preferred stock and bondholders of the American Tobacco Company and holders of the 50-year 4 per cent. bonds of the Consolidated Tobacco Company, three protective committees have been formed, which request deposit of securities with the Guaranty and Central trust companies of New York on or before August 28. The formation of protective committees of American Tobacco security holders calls attention to the much simpler task of reorganizing Standard Oil. In the latter there are only common stockholders to be considered; in the former there are common and preferred stockholders and two classes of bondholders whose rights will have to be carefully considered.

Thompson, Towle & Co. say, regarding rumors of a reduction in Nipissing dividend: President E. P. Earle cabled his office to deny positively rumors of any prospective dividend reduction. General Manager R. B. Watson writes that if Nipissing was worth $10 per share three weeks ago it is worth that now, as there have been no recent developments to cause any break in the stock.

Western farmers seldom have been more optimistic on corn. They put more work on it than ever before. Throughout Iowa and Missouri farmers frequently have cultivated corn a dozen different times, counting harrowing, rolling and ploughing. Stirring the soil in dry season gives improved absorbing power.

The American's Great PROVERB CONTEST

Offers $10,000 in Prizes Free

ANYONE MAY ENTER TO-DAY

If you have not taken advantage of the Boston American's offer of $10,000 in prizes in the great Proverb Contest, you should do so NOW.

Anyone may enter this glorious competition to-day!

Back numbers of the puzzle pictures that have been printed await your order. They may be obtained from the Contest Department, 275 Devonshire Street, at the regular rates of the daily and Sunday American.

This privilege which is extended to contestants for their convenience allows anyone, living in New England, to enter this battle of wits at any time up to the day the last puzzle picture appears.

The attractive and useful Proverb Book may be obtained at the Contest Department, 275 Devonshire Street, either by calling for same or through the mail.

Immediately upon the receipt of a money order for twenty-five cents this Proverb Book will be mailed to any address. It contains the correct answers, somewhere in the book, to each and every puzzle picture used in the contest.

A glance at the long list of prizes will show the advisability of entering this contest TO-DAY!

As the reward for just a little mental effort, there is provided for American readers a costly array of prizes—beginning with a $2,500 Seashore Bungalow Home at Sunset Point, Nantasket; handsome 1912 Automobiles; beautiful Power Boats; Pianos; a $200 Symphony Grand Graphophone; and 990 other valuable rewards.

Start by solving to-day's picture, then send for any back numbers which you may need of pictures already published, and you are then in a position to engage in this mental skirmish on an equal footing with any of those who began the day that the first puzzle picture appeared.

It is really worth YOUR while!

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

J. K. L.—Name and address should be on each answer slip.

B. L. D.—You may make out your two sets on home-made answer slips, but it is desirable that in such cases the printed coupon form be followed as closely as possible.

Laura C.—There can be only one answer to each picture in any one set. If you want to send three solutions to the pictures, you must make out three complete sets.

T. L. Hardy—No proverbs which are not in the American Proverb Book will be represented in the contest.

S. D. Higgins—Contestants should, for their protection, use the exact wording of the official American Proverb Book.

M. O. C.—Each answer must be on a separate slip. It is desirable that the American's answer blank be used, but not necessary.

"American Reader"—It is not necessary to send the pictures.

GENERAL COURT ENDS SESSION

The Massachusetts Legislature brought its session for 1911 to a close this afternoon. It was the longest session in the history of the Commonwealth, lasting 207 calendar days. The session, which up to this time held the record was in General Ben Butler's time, in 1883, when the session lasted 206 days.

To-day's final session was an exciting one, with all the candidates for Governor fighting hard. The day marked the killing of any United Shoe Machinery Company investigation by the State, the House defeating the Bogue order for a recess investigating committee by a vote of 82 to 119.

Governor Foss was accused by opponents of the order of wanting this investigation for political purposes. Martin Lomasney took off his collar and tie and fought the Governor's fight in the debate, his chief opponent being Norman White of Brookline, candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor. Speaker Walker, also a candidate for the Republican nomination, stopped White in his attack on the Governor, declaring it was out of order.

The closing of the Legislature made any reconsideration of the shoe machinery vote impossible.

The debate on the Bogue order lasted two hours. The attack on the United Shoe Machinery Company was led by Lomasney, Bogue of Lynn and Meaney of Blackstone. Opposing the order were Cavanagh of Everett, White of Brookline and Washburn of Worcester. Lomasney declared that Attorney-General Swift could not be depended upon to do any investigating for the State.

"He does not know the laws upon the statue books," declared Lomasney. "He called in Louis Brandeis to draw up a shoe machinery act, because he did not know how to do it himself.

Representative Cavanagh retorted: "The Attorney-General did not seek Mr. Brandeis's assistance. Mr. Brandeis drew up the act and submitted it to the Attorney-General."

Representative Doyle of New Bedford, here jumped into the fight on Lomasney, saying: "The Attorney-General knows his business a darn sight better than does the gentleman from Ward 8."

At this point Lomasney yanked off his collar and tie and started in to do some war-like debating.

Representative White said:

"Governor Foss is just trying to put this investigation through for political reasons. He wants to gain political prestige out of it. He"—

"You are out of order," said Speaker Walker. "You can't talk that way about the Governor unless the House is debating a veto message."

Mr. White sat down, and others took up the fight for the United Shoe Machinery Company, declaring that there is no need of an investigation, as the Federal government is engaged in one now.

Mr. Lomasney hurled a lot of ammunition at the Shoe Machinery Company, which he had gathered at the hearing before the committee of which he is a member.

The House, after the debate was over fell upon the bill and killed it. As "no legislation needed" was the committee report on Governor Foss's request for an investigation, this ends any action by the State this year.

A First-Class Yarn Is Interesting Even if Lacking Verisimilitude

This One, With a Moral, is Unusually Interesting.

Copyright, 1911, by American-Journal-Examiner

Hear this story, dearly beloved, dealing with the rattlesnakes that drank the alcohol in which they were to be preserved—and got delirium tremens as the result.

The minds of men (and especially of out-of-town correspondents) like to dwell on the unusual, and to put in words that which never happened.

A particularly interesting illustration of this human weakness we present here in the story of the rattlesnakes that got drunk.

This we take from the front page of a daily newspaper and print it exactly as presented there:

RATTLESNAKES GET DRUNK; CAUSE PANIC IN LIBRARY

Six Vicious Reptiles Drink Alcohol in Which They Were to Be Preserved.

A panic was caused in the Gary Public Library this morning following the attempts of attendants to place in alcohol for preservation six live rattlesnakes.

The attendants had neglected to provide enough of the fluid, and what little there was the reptiles drank. After swallowing the invigorating draughts the snakes got out of their prisons and proceeded to run everybody out of the building. They were in the last stages of delirium tremens, and several bibulous citizens who witnessed the performance have mounted the water wagon.

It was not until the frisky reptiles became stupefied that the building could be entered.

There is something fascinating for all of us in the mental operations of the gentleman who gets free from the heavy monotonous details of truth and soars in the Munchausen realm of imagination.

All simple minds like that which is unreasonable and impossible.

The simple natives in India admire their fakirs who throw a rope up in the air and then climb up the rope out of sight. Europeans cannot see them do this, but the natives can.

And millions of Buddhists for many long years have especially liked that part of their religion which tells them that the young Buddha as soon as he is born lies suspended in the air with nothing to hold him up, and delivers an important, intelligent oration.

Simple minds tied to this little planet by the law of gravitation are very much interested in those that they imagine free from that law.

And we other simple human beings, tied down more or less by the gravity of truth and of fact, are always pleased with that which escapes that downward pull.

This story of the snakes is free from all the gravity of truth, for no snakes ever drank the alcohol in which they were to be preserved. And no snakes in all probability ever got delirium tremens.

In spite of that, we are all pleased when we read that story. We wonder at the man's moderation in failing to say that the snakes, in their delirium tremens, saw pink men or spotted ladies. For, surely, if men in delirium tremens see queer snakes, snakes in their delirium ought to see queer men.

The story is not merely interesting as an invention, but it is a story with a moral, a sort of a parable for men to think over.

The snake is a very stupid, dull and unpleasant animal.

He used formerly to walk on the tip of the tail, as all those know who read and believe the Old Testament. For a while he was able to look up at the stars like the rest of us and think high thoughts, as he hopped along on his tail tip. But after he tempted Eve and persuaded her to eat the apple and get an education he was punished by being compelled to run around the earth on his belly. Since that time he has got worse and worse, until to-day he is a poisonous, vile, unpleasant, cold-looking thing that couldn't persuade Eve to do anything.

But with all his other defects HE KNOWS ENOUGH NOT TO GET DRUNK.

Let that sink into the minds of those that need a moral on alcohol.

And let those that need no such sermon enjoy the story, invented by the suburban newspaper man who has to write about something.

LETTERS FROM AMERICAN READERS

LABOR COST OF MAKING SHOES ABROAD

Editor AMERICAN:

I noticed recently a letter in your columns signed T. F. N. in which the writer made light of the possibility of foreign competition in shoe manufacturing. He quoted the statement that shoe operatives are paid much higher wages in America than in Germany, and said: "A man in Germany gets $9.00 a week, but does not produce one-third the work in a day that a man in Brockton does who gets $25.00 a week," making the further comment that the German labor is consequently not cheap.

That is one of those statements which may well be classed as "important if true," but the fact of the matter is that government reports, taken within a year or so, show conclusively that the total labor cost involved in the making of shoes was much less in Germany, France and England than in this country. For example, the total labor cost of making a certain medium grade welt shoe in this country was shown to be $49.11 per hundred pairs; in England $27.73; in Germany $21.90.

It makes no difference whether the German workman does one-third as much twice as much, or is paid $9.00 or $50.00; there is the record as to the actual labor cost of making a medium grade shoe in Germany, compared with the actual labor cost of making the same shoe in this country.

The last census showed that the total wages paid in the United States for the census year was $69,059,680. This was divided among 149,924 wage earners, making an average yearly earning of $460, or $8.60 a week. This, of course, included the labor of boys and women, which forms more than one-third of the total number of operatives. The wages paid therefore are not high on the average. The American shoe operative does not receive too much; but there is no manner of question that the British and German shoe operative receives much less and that the free importation of the shoes they produce is a serious danger to the wage scales of American factories.

OILING THE STREETS

Editor AMERICAN:

As a resident of Dorchester, I wish to protest against the present method, or lack of method, in oiling the streets in that district of this city. The oil is intended to prevent dust flying, but so much time is allowed to elapse between the trips by the oil wagon that conditions are worse than in the days of the old watering cart. There is not quite as much dust as then, it is true, but there is plenty and, oil laden as it is, it enters the windows and soils everything it touches and ruins much. It is a positive nuisance.

DORCHESTER.

MAN AND WOMAN "DIFFERENT"

Editor AMERICAN:

Will you allow me, a woman, to say a few words on the "Eternal Woman Question"? To my mind the solution of that inexhaustible question of equality and superiority of man over woman could be easily found by simply remembering the fact that neither man nor women is complete—alone. It takes a man and a woman to make a whole. Therefore, man's mind is not like woman's, and woman's not like man's mind. They are both different. A diamond and a ruby are both precious stones, but they differ in color. If man's mind would admit that woman's mind is a complement to his own, that, instead of opposing and antagonizing her continually he would work in unison with her, the world would see wonderful results.

Because there are fundamental differences in male and female brains, proven by a million autopsies, it is not proven that the female brain is inferior, only different.

My own limited experience has taught me that the average woman is far brighter and cleverer than the average man. So, admitting that some men have more brains than some women, would that not equalise the total?

"The Hall Room Boys" are now a regular feature of the Sunday AMERICAN. Don't miss the laughable adventures of Percy and Ferdy in the Sunday AMERICAN.

The United States Supreme Court Does Not Determine the Public Policy of Massachusetts.

The committee on rules sat yesterday to consider whether it was wise to admit a proposal for legislation against the United Shoe Machinery Company at this late hour of the session.

Mr. Charles H. Jones, who represents that new and admirable type of business man who is not afraid that the bank will call his loans or the railroad will raise his rates, and whose courage and public spirit and talent have challenged the respect of the entire Commonwealth, appeared before the committee in behalf of immediate legislation. He was hectored by some members of the committee, but he rose to every occasion.

Speaker Walker, however, asked him one question which admitted of another answer than the one which he made, and perhaps would have satisfied Mr. Walker's inquiry better than it was satisfied by Mr. Jones. Speaker Walker asked why it was wise for Massachusetts to legislate against the United Shoe Machinery Company when, at this very moment, the federal authorities are proceeding against the company under the Federal anti-trust law.

Mr. Jones is not a lawyer, and one decisive answer did not occur to him. It is this. The Federal government can only proceed against the United Shoe Machinery Company under the Federal anti-trust law as it is interpreted by the United States Supreme Court. Now a majority of that court has read into the Anti-Trust Law the word "reasonable," and the government can only prosecute those monopolies which, in the opinion of the United States Supreme Court, are unreasonably monopolizing trade.

The United Shoe Machinery Company has always confessed to its monopoly, but has sought to avoid public opposition by pleading that it is a benificent monopoly, and that the public reaps more profit than loss from its operations.

Undoubtedly the United Shoe Machinery Company will make the same plea before the United States Supreme Court, and with the strong leaning of a majority of the judges of that court towards the special interests of the country, it is not at all certain that the court would decide the United Shoe Machinery Company to be in unreasonable restraint of trade.

But fortunately the United States Supreme Court has no right to determine the internal policy of Massachusetts. It ought not to have the right to determine public policy for anybody, anywhere. But it certainly cannot extend the immunities and exemptions of its interpretation of the law to operations beyond its jurisdiction, and coming wholly within the purview of our State authorities.

Massachusetts has already declared the methods of the United Shoe Machinery Company to be contrary to public policy, and has attempted to put them down by a law passed several years ago. The United Shoe Machinery Company succeeded in circumventing that law and maintaining its monopoly in spite of the legislative condemnation.

It is now proposed to strengthen the law to the end that operations which have been condemned by the Legislature may cease in this Commonwealth.

To await the result of the prosecution of the United Shoe Machinery Company by the Federal authorities is to wait several years, even if it is successful; and worse than that, it is to permit five out of nine judges to determine for us what is a good and what is a bad trust, when we have already determined it.

Obviously, whatever other reason may be assigned for postponing further legislation in this matter, the activity of the Federal authorities ought not to be given any consideration.

Nobody Mentions Mr. Chandler

They Are Getting Ready in New Hampshire to Select a United States Senator—They Talk of Mr. Bass and Mr. Quinby and Mr. Pillsbury, but Nobody Mentions the Statesman Who Was Jobbed by the Interests in 1901—There's More Talk of Chandler, However, Than of the Man to Whom the Railroad Gave His Toga.

Gentlemen close to or identified with the big interests in New Hampshire are shaking their heads sagely, as they travel up and down the State—at this season of the year an enchanted ground—and telling their friends and neighbors that "Governor" Quinby would certainly make a splendid United States Senator. They mean former Governor Henry B. Quinby of Lakeport, who will be sixty-seven years old when the Legislature of 1913 assembles to elect a Senator.

Mr. Quinby is an estimable gentleman, who stands high among New Hampshire financiers. He is a good citizen, who believes in being "regular." He probably could not be tempted to say anything unpleasant about a fellow mortal, but there is no doubt that his sense of propriety is shocked when he contemplates the queer antics of that strange creature, the "Progressive" Republican.

It would be too much to expect that the New Hampshire Progressives, who swept everything before them last Fall, should go fishing while the Old Guard prepares to walk away with the senatorship. The Progressives want Robert P. Bass for Senator. Mr. Bass is the present Governor. His friends gave the Old Guard such a routing last Fall that the "Regular" newspapers have been attacking him ever since election day. Now they're after him hotter than ever.

There is also some talk—and there is likely to be more—about R. W. Pillsbury of Londonderry, who for some purpose or other bought a newspaper at Manchester a few years ago. Mr. Pillsbury has been a very progressive Republican at times, and a very regular Republican at times. He is extremely interesting.

One might have thought that the Republicans of New Hampshire, as they look back over the past ten years, would be on their knees asking William E. Chandler if he wouldn't please forgive them and, even at the age of 78, take up again his work in the Senate at Washington. Senator Chandler was beaten in 1901 by a coalition of railroad and cotton mill. He had been guilty of lese majeste towards the railroad. In those days New Hampshire was a province of the Boston & Maine.

Strange to say, however, there is no talk of Chandler. There is, however, more talk of Chandler than of the gentleman who got his place. That gentleman and Henry B. Quinby of Laconia are very much of the same type, personally clean, honest, respectable and regular.

The Sunday AMERICAN is going to print an interesting story about the line-up in New Hampshire for the United States Senatorship. Our readers in New Hampshire will agree with us when they have read it that its author "knows his book." Readers in other States will find it far from dull and unprofitable reading.
